Thoughts on the TCU vs. Utah game, Utah wins,27-20

1) How do you go +3 in turnovers and only win by 7 points?

2) Utah's offense did NOT look good tonight. They gained 57 yards after half-time. TCU repeatedly shot themselves in the foot by throwing interceptions, so Utah's only second-half score (a field goal) was enough. But their 2nd half drives where 5 yards (Punt), -3 yards (Punt), 27 yards (Int), 44 yards (Field Goal), 6 yards (punt), 1 yard (Punt), and -23 yards (end of game). Even taking off the last drive (Johnson was running around to take time off the clock), they still only ended up with 80 yards after half-time. Against just about any other team they have left, that won't cut it.

3) TCU will lose 2 more conference games (BYU, New Mexico) if they can't get their offensive troubles ironed out. No offense can be so one-dimensional and be truly successful. Andy Dalton HAS to start making better decisions. 4 INT's (with another nullified because of a penalty) plus at least 2 others that the DB just couldn't come up with is a recipe for disaster against almost any team.

4) Utah will lose at least 2 of their last 4 games (New Mexico, BYU) unless they can iron out their in-game ups and downs. They score 10 straight, give up 14 straight, score 14 straight, and then don't score again until 7:51 is left in the 4th quarter. Shut down Darrell Mack, and you shut down Utah. Wyoming is the swing game right now. If they can duplicate the rushing dominance they've showed against several teams this year, then Utah's only other win will be Colorado State. The good news for Utah is they need only 1 more win to be bowl eligible, and 2 wins will most likely get them a bowl bid.

5) The jury is still out on Utah's defense. They were opportunistic (2 of the picks were basically doing the tip drill), but they were also the beneficiary of some VERY poor decision making by Andy Dalton. 20 points against Air Force and 27 point against the Rebels (neither of which is an offensive juggernaut), plus 28 2nd half points against Louisville show that the defense is vulnerable, although they seem to do well against one-dimensional teams (San Diego, TCU).

6) Likewise, jury is still out on TCU's defense. They have played well in spurts, but have also had appalling lapses (232 yards rushing given up to Wyoming, allowing Air Force 14 points in the 4th quarter). Combine that with a collapse at Texas (34 points allowed in the 2nd half) and you have a defense that has not lived up to its billing.

Should be an interesting next few weeks in the MWC.

Thanks for the analysis. TCU is not a very good football team....again I wonder why they received so much pre-season hype.

Very good analysis - you hit the nail on the head on what I saw, as well.

BYU just needs to play straight up - without the turnovers - and they should win out. I have no doubt about this, based on what I've seen of our last 3 opponents.

Wow! Are you serious? We dominated Arizona and they were lucky too get a touchdown at the very end of the game. What you said about Ucla being overrated and then that you beat them being the 11th ranked team. That is the biggest contradicting thing that I have read on this site. That statement right there is one of the main reasons that I have no respect at all for most Ute fans! You guys are ignorant fair weather fans! Out of BYU and Utah who was the last team too get shutout? Oh yeah that's right it was the utes just a month ago at Unlv, after your "amazing win over Ucla!"

Yoo guys our doughing a grate job talking kar of that uta guy...i fill less entelagant tring to rispond two those pepps.

I got home late last night to check the score. When I saw it, I thought utah must have played really well, and went to bed upset cuz I knew all those fans would be saying all this trash. I was surprised when I went to Deseret News and all the ute fans were saying how bad they thought the team played. That surprised me. Then some of you say they didn't look too hot either. Johnson only had 109 yards or something? That is terrible. TCU must have looked terrible.

Did you read the comment Patterson made that his team can't "beat a junior high team." I cracked up at that! You know he had to have been talking generally, but when they just lost to utah, it just makes you think he was referring to them! I thought it was funny a coach like that would even say that.

I'm not worried about utah. They have no more "circled" games until us. All the teams they play from here on out will be very tough.

TCU is a bad team. Does anyone know what happened to their other all world DE? The only reason that these guys got any hype this year was their defense which is inconsistent at best, and Aaron Brown who is not nearly as good as advertised.

Utah scares me right now for a couple of reasons. 1) They have some confidence back after poor showings at the beginning of the year. 2) They always get up for the game against us.

I don't think our "lose" on the road to UCLA, or our "lose" to a 4-2 Tulsa team on the road was quite as bad as the utes "lose" to UNLV 27-0, or your loss at home to Air Force, but that's just me. It's good to see you're so pumped up about a 7 point win over a crappy TCU team that turned the ball over 5 times. By the way, 227 total yards and 3 points in the second half? Real impressive.;

Congratulations to Utah on another good victory. They are putting together a very nice season. Too bad about their inexplicable earlier losses. While TCU did not play up to their full potential on Thursday, they are still a very solid program. There are no easy wins against TCU. Honestly, Utah does have more impressive wins than BYU and is turning heads. If they can continue this success I think most analysts will view Utah's earlier losses as a good team having a shaky start. I sincerely hope that both they and BYU continue their win streaks. It is always to BYU's advantage to play a strong and respected Utah team in November.

I was at the game, and for what it's worth to some of you Cougs, here's my thoughts.

TCU was probably the toughest D we've faced yet. The game was kind of a slow going game because it seemed to me to be a defense controlled game. Thoughts:

- Utahs Defense was good to great. I would say only 10 of the 20 points were actually given up by the defense. They got that one punt block/return, plus one field goal that wasn't really their fault. They did great at containing Brown. That guy is a stud and whenever he would turn the corner, you might as well just start moving the chains. TCU's run game was very physical, and Utah contained it pretty decent.

-TCU's defense did great all around. I don't think Mack got a run that had more then 7 yards to it. Mack was getting a few yards, but not first downs (but hey, it ate up the clock, which is what we wanted). TCU also had great coverage, and they benefited greatly from 2 bad passes from Brian.

-Utah Special Teams did poor (I think that's the first time this year I've said that). That blocked punt/return for TD energized the TCU team. Had that not happened, they wouldn't have gotten as pumped as they were to come back. Also, our guys couldn't stop the punt/kick off returns for crap. The only time I saw that they started on the 20 was when they downed it in the endzone. Anytime TCU ran it back, they started at around the 40. That is what kept TCU in the game.

-Utah offense did enough to win. Brian's shoulder is still hurting him, and you can tell when he throws passes over 15 yards. He made some bad decisions in the pocket as well. What I liked though, was the leadership that was there with him. They kept playing, and gritted it out to the end for a win. Some Utes are upset that we didn't win with Urban era numbers, but I don't care about that. We are a young team and you can tell this because most of our play makers are freshmen and sophmores. We've got young guys taking over because of injuries, and they are slowly getting the hang of it. Brian Johnson makes the difference in this offense. Without him, they do not exist.

It was a great game to watch. Most the TCU fans I met were gracious and good fans.

227 yards total offense is tough Tim. And a good portion of that was in the First half. It looked kind of like byu but in reverse. BYU has no points in the first half then blows up in the second. I have to admit though I found the game painful to watch. This of course had quite a bit to do with Utah winning.

Hey zoobies whats up , Guess what the utes won there fourth straight game, who cares how close it was , The UTES won. By the Way Byu football is real good i liked your impressive win vs a 7th ranked pac 10 team by a margin of 13 good job and your lose vs tulsa and over rated UCLA . GO UTES we won #11 UCLA. Your Team gets to much Media exposure on such crappy wins.

P.S. I BLEED RED.

You "won" them? That is how my 5 year old talks. And since you "won" them, are they at home on your shelf next to your "We let UNLV shut us out" trophy?

Good for you. You've been a ute your whole life. But my comment was that most of your buddies are ignorant! fair weather fans! I'm sure your just on this site to stir the pot! Reminds me of the Arizona fans that were on here for months talking trash. If you want have a little playful banter, but if your just on here because you want to cause problems? Then you might as well go too Ute board! We don't want that here! :evil:

Dude,
How old are you? You can't be older than 7 or 8. Just go away!

I wonder what a "We let UNLV shut us out" trophy looks like.
