
Lynn Katoa

Posted by CougarPeasant - 2007/05/30 11:31

I know Lynn Katoa has been briefly mentioned before on this board, but looking at his profile

Lynn Katoa

I want to know if anyone has any news to report on why BYU isn't on his list of teams, though he has talked to BYU some.

Help?!

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by A_King - 2007/05/30 12:44

Here's an article about where BYU fit in with his early offers, but need to shell out the money I have for season tickets to read it. Anyone know what it said about his prospects with BYU?

Early Offers

ok...link failed try below

<http://story.scout.com/a.z?s=338&p=2&c=620824&ssf=1&RequestedURL=http%3a%2f%2fbyu.scout.com%2f2%2f620824.html>

Post edited by: A_King, at: 2007/05/30 12:46

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by gingi - 2007/05/30 13:26

Fwiw, CP, I read something Lynn had said as reported by Scout.com at <http://recruiting.scout.com/2/627885.html>

about BYU (and Utah) not being in a big conference and never playing for a national championship. What do you think? Have you heard if BYU's atmosphere is anathema to him?

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by cruiser - 2007/05/30 14:02

CougarPeasant wrote:

I know Lynn Katoa has been briefly mentioned before on this board, but looking at his profile

Lynn Katoa

I want to know if anyone has any news to report on why BYU isn't on his list of teams, though he has talked to BYU some.

Help?!

He looks like a fine athlete who will probably go elsewhere. He is a 6'2" 220 linebacker who runs a 4.58 forty. He says his first choice is Texas, and his second is USC, neither of which had offered him at the time of the last interview (March 19th). His third choice seems to be Oklahoma, which has offered him. Although both BYU and Utah have offered him, he doesn't seem interested:

"I want to get out of state," he said. "They aren't in a big conference and they never play for the national championship. I never really watched them."

He also said he doesn't know much about BYU, which may seem a little unusual for someone playing ball just 35 miles from LaVell Edward Stadium (Cottonwood High School), but if he truly doesn't watch them on TV, that would explain it.

It looks like Lynn is another in-state athlete who will go out of state.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Pwride - 2007/05/30 14:09

I have heard before that the Coaches at Cottonwood do all they can to get their kids out of state. Rumor or Fact, who knows, but could explain why he doesn't even think about BYU or Utah.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by A_King - 2007/05/30 14:13

I hope he does well, and doesn't regret it when Bronco has us in the mix for National Championship contention and he could have looked REAL good as a 4-year starter.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by MajorCougar - 2007/05/30 14:20

It are these comments specifically that SOMETHING needs to change, otherwise, it's going to get worse for BYU and other "non-BCS" teams, before it gets better.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by CougarPeasant - 2007/05/30 14:49

cruiser wrote:

He looks like a fine athlete who will probably go elsewhere. He is a 6'2" 220 linebacker who runs a 4.58 forty. He says his first choice is Texas, and his second is USC, neither of which had offered him at the time of the last interview (March 19th). His third choice seems to be Oklahoma, which has offered him. Although both BYU and Utah have offered him, he doesn't seem interested:

"I want to get out of state," he said. "They aren't in a big conference and they never play for the national championship. I never really watched them."

He also said he doesn't know much about BYU, which may seem a little unusual for someone playing ball just 35 miles from LaVell Edward Stadium (Cottonwood High School), but if he truly doesn't watch them on TV, that would explain it.

It looks like Lynn is another in-state athlete who will go out of state.

cruiser, thanks for your comments. I thought it was unusual as well that he didn't know much about BYU. Maybe he doesn't have the mtn. Here is a case study as to why the BCS system screws those schools not in the cartel. This is a talented kid who could play for any school, but those schools in his own backyard don't stand a chance because of the BCS.

I just can't believe there isn't some LDS connection. On the link, it shows he's been offered by USC. I can understand why Texas would be a favorite, but if I were to go out of state for football and got an offer from USC, it would be a no brainer. USC all the way with their track record on linebackers. Yet, being a 3 year starter at BYU would get him on an NFL roster too. Would love to see him say he wants to stay in state so he can help bust up the BCS.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by cougfan1 - 2007/05/30 15:23

Pwride wrote:

I have heard before that the Coaches at Cottonwood do all they can to get their kids out of state. Rumor or Fact, who knows, but could explain why he doesn't even think about BYU or Utah.

Although it may just be coincidence or rumor, it does seem like the players coming out of Cottonwood have lacked interest in in-state schools. Alex Cate, Stanley Havili, and Simi Fili are the 3 that come to mind in the last 2 yrs. If I remember right, Cate's dad is a coach for the football team at Cottonwood. I think someone on the board mentioned that he encouraged the players to lean toward the out-of-state, big time schools. Alex Cate went to Okl. State, Havili to USC, and Fili to Oregon. It seems like Katoa is going to do the same. Each showed very little interest in state (excluding Havili who just showed some interest at the end...although it probably wasn't serious). So, I could see how the rumors could be valid.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Florwood - 2007/05/30 15:39

CougarPeasant wrote:

Would love to see him say he wants to stay in state so he can help bust up the BCS.

Any 18-year-old that can succeed at a BCS school is likely to go there--I don't see any big waves of high-minded teenagers standing on principle any time soon.

Speaking of the BCS, good ol' Dr. Machen should be presenting his playoff pitch to the SEC presidents in June. Now THAT could shake things up! Here's a story from April on what he's pitching:

<http://www.sportsline.com/collegefootball/story/10105947>

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Pwride - 2007/05/30 15:48

Today there is another story on ESPN about it:

<http://sports.espn.go.com/ncf/news/story?id=2885646>

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by yutka - 2007/05/30 15:49

I don't know... If the kid lived that close and says "I don't know much about BYU." Is he the kind of player we want at BYU. Sure he is talented, and I hope he does well wherever he ends up...but there are plenty of talented kids who dream of coming to BYU. I would rather leave spots open for those kids than kids who will always be keeping an eye on the BCS schools and wondering "what if..."

I hope he makes the right decision for HIM and doesn't let things like the BCS and National Championships dissuade him. If it is BYU...then great. If it isn't... no big.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by yutka - 2007/05/30 15:49

edit--Not sure why, but I got an error and a double post...

Post edited by: yutka, at: 2007/05/30 15:50

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Pwride - 2007/05/30 15:52

I have to agree. To see kids like Holt, Hola, Yeck, Bol, etc. who dream of playing at BYU get a chance is what makes this early recruiting fun. As much as I'd like all 4 stars, it's hard to argue with the dedication and effort these kids will put into the program.

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by CougarPeasant - 2007/05/30 16:02

Pwride wrote:

Today there is another story on ESPN about it:

<http://sports.espn.go.com/nfl/news/story?id=2885646>

Thanks for the link. Here's a quote from it:

By the end of the week, the SEC will announce a record payout that should exceed $120 million, surpassing last year's record of $110.7 million. That would mean each of the 12 league members will receive at least $10 million for the first time.

$10 million a year just from bowl payouts. That's what most non BCS schools spend for their entire football program. Don't tell me the BCS money doesn't make a difference.

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Isola - 2007/05/30 16:32

I don't know that it is the so-called cartel that is drawing away recruits. Utah isn't the only state to lose 4-star prospects to out of state schools. There are plenty of states with "cartel" schools that still lose a chunk of their top prospects. Other states losing their National Top 100 Prospects despite having cartel schools, according to scout.com

Arizona	100%
Arkansas	100%
Georgia	40%
Illinois	50%
Indiana	100%
Kansas	100%
Louisiana	42%
Michigan	75%
New Jersey	60%
Oklahoma	50%
Pennsylvania	33%

Plus if you look at Arizona and Washington, both having two cartel schools each, and look at their retention of 4&5-star prospects, the state of Utah did better, at least in 2007.

	Arizona,	Washington,	Utah
Stayed	3,	2,	2
Left	5,	4,	2
Retention	38%,	33%,	50%

And we stole one of Washington's 4-star guys in Munns.

I'm just saying we can't blame the BCS for everything. I also agree with yukta and pwride. If Katoa wants to play here, great. But if he doesn't care about BYU, then go someplace else. We are looking for guys who are proud to play for the Y.

Post edited by: Isola, at: 2007/05/30 16:38

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by CougarPeasant - 2007/05/30 16:43

Florwood wrote:

Any 18-year-old that can succeed at a BCS school is likely to go there--I don't see any big waves of high-minded teenagers standing on principle any time soon.

Speaking of the BCS, good ol' Dr. Machen should be presenting his playoff pitch to the SEC presidents in June. Now THAT could shake things up! Here's a story from April on what he's pitching:

<http://www.sportsline.com/collegefootball/story/10105947>

Actually, my comment was a bit tongue in cheek and also to highlight the kind of athletes we want at BYU, those that have a chip on their shoulder about being told they can't compete.

Good read on Dr. Machen's interview. He really does seem to be interested in fairness in D1 football. I have to give props to Meyers too for his views on Utah and a playoff system.

I think when the President of the school that won both football and basketball titles ridicules the BCS and says it is a bad thing for college, there is no doubt that it is.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Slugger - 2007/05/31 14:00

This could very well be true. A co-worker of mine's husband was an assistant coach at Cottonwood until very recently and though I've never heard anything quoted directly about this I've heard enough through conversations to form the opinion that Cottonwood has really put themselves on a pedestal. They seem to think they are a grade higher than anything the state of Utah has to offer so they often shun the "local" scene. As far as Katoa's comment that he never actually watched them (BYU or Utah), he may have not watched them but if he really is an athlete he would have at least a general knowledge of where the programs are, or are heading. I think it's a blanket statement to show that he's better than the MWC. Maybe he is and maybe he isn't, I certainly don't know. I just know that the Cottonwood program is not exactly full of Cougar fans so getting anyone to come from CWHS is going to be a stretch. But hey, they can go ahead and have the limelight and the big stage like uh, oh what was his name...umm...oh, yeah, Alex Cate. He went on to big things didn't he? Too good for the MWC huh?

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by x_rugger - 2007/05/31 17:40

cottonwood high school does have a high opinion of it's sports programs, though only in recent years. daddy cate, who was on the utah football team, has put millions into the school(ie fields, weight rooms, coaches ect). they also pull kids in from all over the valley, and not just for sports. 70% of the school's population are bussed in due to over crowding in west side schools, and excess capacity at chs.

this has created some interesting dilemas for the school. only 1 of the nine starting players on the state champion baseball team lived in the boundry, and several of the star football players are/were also from outside the boundry (including stanley havili). in-boundry students are conflicted as tranfers come into the school and take their spots. do you play for a loser, or sit the bench for a winner.

this may not be a dilema for long. it appears that chs is on the chopping block, and could close due to school district re-alignment in the next few years.

regarding the katoa kid, it is not unreasonable that he hasn't followed byu football. many of the poly's that live in utah come here from cali, or direct from the islands. the article also implies that he is relitively new to football, and is still trying to learn the game.

ps where is the spell check button?????

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by yutka - 2007/05/31 19:17

spell check button?-- try www.getfirefox.com
it has a built in spell check...otherwise... good luck...
x_rugger wrote:

ps where is the spell check button?????

Post edited by: yutka, at: 2007/05/31 20:17

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by LinemenRule - 2007/05/31 23:58

Sorry to rain on the parade guys but Katoa is from Euless, Texas. Home of Trinity High. He never followed any Utah football as he was watching TEXAS Football. Which means Texas football 24/7. Most of them rednecks barely know Utah is a state let alone has colleges in it.

Lynn moved here barely over 2 years ago.

ALSO, BYU has yet to offer him. WHY would he come if we are about the only ones in the country, it sounds like, that HAVE NOT offered him a full ride????????

Finally he is a great player but he's not a typical BYU type kid. I'll leave it at that.

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by LinemenRule - 2007/06/01 00:08

ALSO, Cottonwood is doing a very good job in their sports programs in general. The success they are having is quite Timpviev-like in that success breeds success.

Many excellent players are open enrolling at Cottonwood to be a part of something special. Not all players are directed out of state by any means there are more players on Utah's roster from Cottonwood than any other school. Weber state also gets 1 or 2 players PER YEAR.

Crowton didn't do much of a job there. The jury is out on how well Doman is doing but I know the Cottonwood coaches came to the coaching clinic and several kids were at Jr Day last month and more are expected Tomorrow (June 1) as well. ALSO both Doman and Coach Anae have come to workouts during May recruiting.

In the meantime ANY time a wealthy guy wants to spend some money upgrading a PUBLIC high school, in any way.....THAT'S OK BY ME!!!!

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by CougarPeasant - 2007/06/01 08:26

LinemenRule wrote:

Sorry to rain on the parade guys but Katoa is from Eules, Texas. Home of Trinity High. He never followed any Utah football as he was watching TEXAS Football. Which means Texas football 24/7. Most of them rednecks barely know Utah is a state let alone has colleges in it.

Lynn moved here barely over 2 years ago.

ALSO, BYU has yet to offer him. WHY would he come if we are about the only ones in the country, it sounds like, that HAVE NOT offered him a full ride???????

Finally he is a great player but he's not a typical BYU type kid. I'll leave it at that.

His being from Texas explains his love affair with the Longhorns. If he is LDS, then he went to the Eules 2d Ward, a ward with I shared buildings when I lived in Texas. The kids loved BYU, but that was pre Crowton when I was there. I believe BYU offered him according to one of the interviews he gave, but it sounded like he wasn't all that excited and might have turned it down already. Just a guess mind you. Further, BYU has recruited from Trinity in the past so it's not like he hadn't heard of them as he claims unless he truly is new to football.

If he's a die hard Texas fan, then good luck to him should he get an offer. If he isn't committed to BYU like Mendenhall expects of his recruits, then it would be a waste time on both parts. Further, if he isn't all that thrilled with being LDS, ifin he is, then BYU would be a mistake and could jeopardize his chances at a pro career.

But thanks for the info, it helps explain alot about why he doesn't appear to be on BYU's radar though he is considered the top Utah recruit on one board.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by jimmyz2 - 2007/06/01 10:45

anyone know if he is related to Andy Katoa?

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by daikini - 2007/06/01 16:52

Two things...

If he doesn't know anything about BYU and doesn't care to, I'd rather he didn't learn.

If he doesn't know anything about BYU and DOES care to, I'd like him to learn.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by x_rugger - 2007/06/01 17:22

LinemenRule wrote:

ALSO, Cottonwood is doing a very good job in their sports programs in general. The success they are having is quite Timpview-like in that success breeds success.

Many excellent players are open enrolling at Cottonwood to be a part of something special. Not all players are directed out of state by any means there are more players on Utah's roster from Cottonwood than any other school. Weber state also gets 1 or 2 players PER YEAR.

Crowton didn't do much of a job there. The jury is out on how well Doman is doing but I know the Cottonwood coaches came to the coaching clinic and several kids were at Jr Day last month and more are expected Tomorrow (June 1) as well. ALSO both Doman and Coach Anae have come to workouts during May recruiting.

In the meantime ANY time a wealthy guy wants to spend some money upgrading a PUBLIC high school, in any way.....THAT'S OK BY ME!!!!

i to think mr cate is having a positive impact at cottonwood high school. he is putting sports turf on the football field as you read this, and the weight room is better then many colleges. more improtant is that kids have a proctored study hall to help them keep their grades up. it is to the point where they have to check in with the strength coach, and if their grades aren't up to par, they are sent to study hall until they are, then they can train.

that doesn't eliminate the boundry conflicts that are bound to happen, and it doesn't change that fact that unless something changes in the next few years, cottonwood high school may cease to exist.

either way, props to mr cate and all he has done, especially when you concider that utah has one of the lowest per student spending rates in the united states.

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by kitione47 - 2007/12/05 20:53

Hi,

My name is Saimone Katoa and I am a Sophmore at Cottonwood High. I just wanted to tell you that, Lyn Katoa is not related to Andy Katoa.

Andy Katoa is my dad's brother and my uncle, but that's just if your talking about the Andy, who played for the Chargers with Seau.

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by McGregor - 2007/12/06 07:39

Pwride wrote:

I have heard before that the Coaches at Cottonwood do all they can to get their kids out of state. Rumor or Fact, who knows, but could explain why he doesn't even think about BYU or Utah.

It's no rumor. Cate hates BYU, and for whatever reasons known largely to him, spends significant resources to get kids out of the state. Right now, he damages BYU's chances with many Cottonwood kids. In the near future, his efforts will be mere dents.

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Slugger - 2007/12/06 09:33

Pwride wrote:

I have heard before that the Coaches at Cottonwood do all they can to get their kids out of state. Rumor or Fact, who knows, but could explain why he doesn't even think about BYU or Utah.

My co-worker's husband used to be an assistant coach at Cottonwood and for some reason they have really developed the attitude that they are too good for anything local. They pushing real hard to attention and recognition and they think by sending their kids to big schools out of state it somehow makes them look prestigious. It is a very ignorant, arrogant attitude if you ask me. Katoa's comment about BYU and Utah not being "in a big conference" and "never watched them" is a red flag that he thinks he is better than he probably is. Best of luck to him but he's not BYU material anyway.

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Pwride - 2007/12/06 09:42

I think I read an article just the other day that said he committed to Colorado. Why play at a ranked team when you can party in Boulder? Just kidding... Kind of.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by splittbamboo - 2007/12/06 09:56

Because in Boulder you can play for a national championship :S

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by CAFB_04-12 - 2007/12/06 15:52

You can do a lot of things in Boulder ...
Link

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by OLB - 2008/03/15 08:53

I'm glad this kid either (1) didn't take BYU seriously or (2) Mendenhall didn't take Katoa seriously.

Seems that Katoa has an agression problem off the field.

Katoa is under investigation for 2nd degree assault in Boulder. Katoa slammed someone's head into a wall and hit the guy in the forehead with a rock. Katoa then hit someone else in the head. Makes ballongate look like child's play.

Anyway, you can read all about it here <http://sportsillustrated.cnn.com/2008/football/ncaa/03/14/cu.assault.ap/index.html>

Looks like Coach Hawkins will suspend Katoa from "competition" but will still allow him to "practice" until issue is resolved. Hmmmm, sounds like a real harsh penalty considering there aren't any games in the middle of spring.

Anyway, rather see these problems in Boulder and not Provo.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by stgeorgefan - 2008/03/16 03:01

OLB wrote:

I'm glad this kid either (1) didn't take BYU seriously or (2) Mendenhall didn't take Katoa seriously.

Seems that Katoa has an agression problem off the field.

Katoa is under investigation for 2nd degree assault in Boulder. Katoa slammed someone's head into a wall and hit the guy in the forehead with a rock. Katoa then hit someone else in the head. Makes ballongate look like child's play.

Anyway, you can read all about it here <http://sportsillustrated.cnn.com/2008/football/ncaa/03/14/cu.assault.ap/index.html>

Looks like Coach Hawkins will suspend Katoa from "competition" but will still allow him to "practice" until issue is resolved. Hmmmm, sounds like a real harsh penalty considering there aren't any games in the middle of spring.

Anyway, rather see these problems in Boulder and not Provo.

This is why Bronco didn't recruit him... Bronco is a great judge of charactor. Katoa was non-Lds and had a ruff history. A god talent but not a good fit for BYU.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by BOID - 2008/03/16 16:07

I'm sorry, but I'm not that magnanimous as to wish well for a kid like this. My weakness is that I wish for him to go to a BCS program that gets beaten by BYU and ends up being out-ranked by BYU.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by WACoug - 2008/03/16 16:11

stgeorgefan wrote:

OLB wrote:

This is why Bronco didn't recruit him... Bronco is a great judge of character. Katoa was non-Lds and had a ruff history. A god talent but not a good fit for BYU.

How could someone with a God talent not be a good fit for BYU? ;)

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by JUSTBYU - 2008/03/17 08:00

WACoug wrote:

stgeorgefan wrote:

OLB wrote:

This is why Bronco didn't recruit him... Bronco is a great judge of character. Katoa was non-Lds and had a ruff history. A god talent but not a good fit for BYU.

How could someone with a God talent not be a good fit for BYU? ;)

That's just funny right there, i dont care who you are.

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by domanater - 2008/03/17 08:23

You have to think if Katoa starts like this, it's just a matter of time before it becomes a problem in practice and on the field too. These are the types of talents that kill good teams.

Can't think of a better place for him to play (except maybe up north).

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by Conosticator - 2008/03/17 08:58

domanater wrote:

These are the types of talents that kill good teams.

No worry there since Colorado isn't a good team... ;)

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by BYUtx - 2008/03/17 19:00

So is he already looking to transfer to Hawaii or does he need to get kicked out of school first?

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by BoiseBYU - 2008/03/18 13:05

What the flying frick does suspending Katoa from "competition" but still allowing him to "practice" until issue is resolved mean? It means nothing....there is NO competition Dan....Egads Dan Hawkins has humiliated himself and is the latest prostitute to winning at the expense of character, teaching, and turning boys into men....I guess the University of Colorado FB team will always be the home of the convicts, the punks, and the perverts....

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by OLB - 2008/03/18 20:56

BoiseBYU wrote:

What the flying frick does suspending Katoa from "competition" but still allowing him to "practice" until issue is resolved mean? It means nothing....there is NO competition Dan....Egads Dan Hawkins has humiliated himself and is the latest prostitute to winning at the expense of character, teaching, and turning boys into men....I guess the University of Colorado FB team will always be the home of the convicts, the punks, and the perverts....

Last night the local news (I live in Colorado) said that Katoa and the other 3 players arrested over the last few days (all arrests were unrelated) have been held out of spring practice. So either the media didn't get it right (which is entirely possible) or Hawkins had a change of heart (also very possible).

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by BoiseBYU - 2008/03/18 21:15

OLB wrote:

BoiseBYU wrote:

What the flying frick does suspending Katoa from "competition" but still allowing him to "practice" until issue is resolved mean? It means nothing....there is NO competition Dan....Egads Dan Hawkins has humiliated himself and is the latest prostitute to winning at the expense of character, teaching, and turning boys into men....I guess the University of Colorado FB team will always be the home of the convicts, the punks, and the perverts....

Last night the local news (I live in Colorado) said that Katoa and the other 3 players arrested over the last few days (all arrests were unrelated) have been held out of spring practice. So either the media didn't get it right (which is entirely possible) or Hawkins had a change of heart (also very possible).

I hope you are right, for Katoa's sake, and the media got it right and what was reported here is not correct. We already have enough Jeramy Stevenses in the world...

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by BlueBalls - 2008/03/22 06:29

BoiseBYU wrote:

OLB wrote:

BoiseBYU wrote:

What the flying frick does suspending Katoa from "competition" but still allowing him to "practice" until issue is resolved mean? It means nothing....there is NO competition Dan....Egads Dan Hawkins has humiliated himself and is the latest prostitute to winning at the expense of character, teaching, and turning boys into men....I guess the University of Colorado FB team will always be the home of the convicts, the punks, and the perverts....

Last night the local news (I live in Colorado) said that Katoa and the other 3 players arrested over the last few days (all arrests were unrelated) have been held out of spring practice. So either the media didn't get it right (which is entirely possible) or Hawkins had a change of heart (also very possible).

I hope you are right, for Katoa's sake, and the media got it right and what was reported here is not correct. We already have enough Jeramy Stevenses in the world...

Dan Hawkins has not humiliated himself and is certainly no ho. I guarantee that Geer and Katoa will be the recipients of appropriate disciplinary action because that is how Hawkins and Colorado work. To say that Hawkins "is the latest prostitute to winning at the expense of character, teaching, and turning boys into men" is a ridiculous statement. You know nothing about Hawkins, because if you did, you would not have written this garbage. Why don't we let everything play out before we jump to conclusions and judge people so harshly? When it was reported that Katoa would be allowed to practice until the case was resolved, he hadn't been charged with anything. Now he is being charged with second-degree assault and is not practicing, so how about we wait and see what develops further from here? By the way, last year one of CU's starting linebackers was suspended from school for the fall semester because he beat up someone who was messing with one of his friends.

Off the top of my head, didn't BYU have at least two players last year who had scuffles with the law (Hooks and Tonga)? I'm not entirely sure if you can lump Soto with these two, but if you can, that would make at least three players. Also, if I recall correctly, several football players were kicked out of BYU a few years back due primarily to rape allegations. Does this mean that BYU "will always be the home of the convicts, the punks, and the perverts" because the BYU coaches cannot micro manage all of their players? Of course it does not.

It's also interesting to note that the reason Katoa did what he did is because he witnessed one of his friends being shocked with a stun gun. Not that this necessarily justifies his actions, but I think it's safe to say that some of BYU's players would have responded in a similar manner had the same thing happened to one of their friends before their eyes. After all, what would Hooks have done to those water balloon dorks last year had the police not arrived when they did? Also, last time I checked, throwing water balloons at someone is not nearly as serious or as aggravating as victimizing someone with a stun gun.

Katoa had a rough upbringing and was likely doing his best to make a huge adjustment to college life. I hope he learns from his mistake and am confident that Colorado will deal with him appropriately. By the way, out of curiosity, how many of you would do nothing if you witnessed one of your friends being attacked by someone with a stun gun?

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by BigTex - 2008/03/24 13:47

^ A well balanced post

thanks for not drowning in the Kool-aide

=====

Re:Lynn Katoa

Posted by CougarBandit - 2008/03/24 14:32

BlueBalls wrote:

It's also interesting to note that the reason Katoa did what he did is because he witnessed one of his friends being shocked with a stun gun. Not that this necessarily justifies his actions, but I think it's safe to say that some of BYU's players would have responded in a similar manner had the same thing happened to one of their friends before their eyes. After all, what would Hooks have done to those water balloon dorks last year had the police not arrived when they did? Also, last time I checked, throwing water balloons at someone is not nearly as serious or as aggravating as victimizing someone with a stun gun.

Fwiw, according to Hooks and So'oto, Hooks was on his way out of the apartment when the police arrived on the scene. So'oto had already persuaded him to calm down somewhat. And, although the charges were similar, most "victims" would probably prefer to have doors smashed in than their head smashed with a rock.

Also, water balloons = fun?, not too serious.

Water balloons from 3rd floor = not so fun, stupid.

Third floor water balloons plus racial slurs, cursing and taunting a girl friend while challenging the boyfriend to fight = very stupid, almost as stupid, maybe, as participating in a presumably unjustified fight while using a stun gun.

If you want to encourage a fair comparison, treat each side fairly, not with partiality to either side of the question.

But good points anyways.

=====