
you got swatted= worse cheer ever?

I have a confession, i absolutely hate the you got swatted cheer. I enjoy the student section getting on players and one of my buddies goes crazy for the left, right, left right -see ya cheer, but i think there is an underground contingent that absolutely hates the swatted cheer, does anyone else agree or am i alone.

i also like the old school "roof" cheer on a big block

i used to not like it so much, but then my buddy mved to town and he started going nuts when they did it so i have grown to look forward to it. I sit in the middle of a bunch of old people so it's pretty entertaining to see him go wild all by himself.

I personally like the "you got swatted" cheer. But my favorite is the classic "airball" - especially when it happens at the beginning of the game and they continue to chant airball whenever the player touches the ball the rest of the game.

For me, the worst cheer has got to be "overrated...clap clap clap"

Do these college students comprehend what they are saying? They are minimalizing their own team's accomplishments by coming up with excuses for the opponents loss. If anything, you want the opponent to be highly rated so you look good by comparison. I always thought "underrated" would be a better cheer.

I wholeheartedly agree. I have never understood the overrated chant. It really is like saying, WOW, you guys are so bad you got beat by US!

I hate when people stand up and make a lot of noise. It gets really distracting when I'm trying to talk to my date. It's like I wore the pink polo for nothing! :laugh: :laugh: :laugh: :laugh:

These are the people they need a cheer for!

When I went to the BYU-Mich St game last year in Detroit I got a lot of looks (from the BYU fans no less) like "hey just shutup and sitdown. The guys right behind me (3 beer drinking MSU beer gut fans in red wings jerseys were really cool about it. They laughed and we had a great time making fun of each other's teams etc. But a lot of the BYU fans there were sitting on their hands as if they were hoping nobody would notice them. I know Detroit is scary but at least show a little spirit! Something real funny was the BYU fans in front of us moved to some open seats at the other end of their row at halftime. And it wasn't as if we were shouting anything obnoxious. Just cheering for the players. I'm just glad the "detroit drunks" showed up because they made it a lot of fun. They were real respectful to the players and church too. Pretty cool guys.

That drives me absolutely insane. The guy can shoot an airball one minute into the game and then go for 50 and with 2 minutes to go people will still be yelling "Airball" evrytime he touches it. Its ridiculous!! Get on the guy for a few possesions and then move on!!

Agreed. I mean if it's really making a difference in the way he plays then by all means keep on yelling "air ball", but in most cases the next time down the guys makes a shot. Other than that it just gets annoying and it just sounds like a bunch of jiberish, especially when the guy touches the ball for one second before passing it.

I love the you got swated cheer. In inturmurals there was a team named swat. When they got blocked, it was "SWAT got swated!" almost brings a tear to my eye. I don't think BYU students get the air ball chant. AFTER HE MAKES A BUCKET, YOU HAVE TO SHUT UP! You can't just keep chanting air ball the whole game.

Those michigan state fans know how to cheer, I'll give em that. There were a bunch at the ESA game this year, and man they were organized. BYU fans should take a page out of their fan play book. :-)

I realize this is absolutely terrible, and my karma will probably take a hit for it, but I can't help it... the most HILARIOUS chant I've ever heard was started at a BYU game against Air Force (can't remember the year exactly, but it was the game Mike Hall got up and POSTERIZED Nick Welch that made the SportsCenter play of the week), but right after Welch flipped off the student section (yes, I saw it personally, no heresay), there was a group of students that started chanting DON'T ASK DON'T TELL DON'T ASK DON'T TELL!

TERRIBLE, I know, but I about DIED laughing.

The kicker was that the guy who started the chant was the kid who played "Ernie" in Saturday's Warrior. I know this because I was there with my wife and she was in a few acting classes with the guy. Of all the people, right? :laugh:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HutjmqeQKPM> Amen Brother! Karma in a BIG way for making that fond memory a visual experience for all to partake! I keep telling myself as the years go by that I'm making that dunk cooler in my mind than it actually was, and then I see the replay somewhere, and realize, NOPE, it was as FREAKING AWESOME as the day I saw it live!

On another note:

You know, after stewing on it over a night's sleep, I feel like I've unjustly defamed Welch a little bit. My wife's Uncle is a Professor at the Academy and knows Nick Welch very well, and he attests that Welch is a really good and decent kid, and was surprised when we told him what we saw. Since I have a personal endorsement of the guy's character from a person I respect greatly, I would be remiss if I didn't include that it sounds like the gesture he made at the fans was out of character for him, made in the heat of the moment, and if he had it to do over, he probably would have thought better of it. There, I feel better now.

Kinda sounds like a certain BYU tight end at a game in Hawaii. Good on ya for giving both sides.

in high school my team wasn't the best, American Fork of course, but the student section rocked and constantly got ejected and technical fouls. There was a cheer leader who was showing off he flipping skills and we were chanting "tubby tumbler clap clap clap clap" everytime she did something, unfortunately she cried the whole night after and we had to all get on a bus over an apologize. WE also through things, bouncy balls, pennies, live doves, when we scored the first basket against our rivals. We did have some pretty sweet cheers lime h-o-m-o- homo at the free throw, and we'd taunt other teams fans cause our team was loosing most of the time.
