I say they follow last year's idea of using a QB from a weak conference that is soon to fade away and that was pretty good in college but has no real pro-football future outside of AFL2. They could call it "pulling a Zabransky."

on the first screen that's true, but when you click to be able to vote, he's wearing the right jersey. you can only see the top part of it, but there's no mistaking it.

go cougs!!

Unfortunately Huckabee has conspired with McCain to get Arizonas mascot on there. :P

The good story is that Obama and Clinton aren't even aware that football exists.

I voted for Cosmo too. This thread made me remember how mad I was with BYU's rating on last years game so I just sent the following message to EA Sports:

"I sure hope you spend a little more time researching the team ratings for the upcoming edition of NCAA Football. The last two years you have greatly underestimated BYU. They have gone 11-2 over the last 2 years and they are returning all of their stars on offense. They will be ranked in the top 25 to start the season and I hope this year you will rank their team accordingly.

Last year (08) you had them ranked as a 69! I think even you would have to admit that is terribly low, especially when you rank teams like SDSU and Duke as 80's. btw- BYU beat SDSU 48-27 last year. BYU has not lost a conference game for 2 years and I would expect this next year they are easily rated the top team in the conference, and not the worst like in years past.

I have bought every EA NCAA game for the last 5 years, but if you continue to give such horrendous ratings to the Cougars I will have to take my game buying dollars elsewhere."

If I wasn't so cynical, I probably wouldn't think this.... but, I bet part of their ranking formula is how many people like a certain team. You sell more when you make your customer's happy. I wonder..... Where's Airwolf with his conspiracy theories?
