
Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by cruiser - 2008/03/07 15:02

College Football News named Bronco Mendenhall the #1 non-BCS coach in the country. They said he is "on the verge of being a superstar."

1. Bronco Mendenhall, BYU

There's a chance he might stick around Provo and not be off elsewhere, he's a true believer in the BYU program, but if he keeps up what he's been doing over the past few years, he might get an offer he can't refuse. He was all about restoring the pride to the program, and he's done that and then some going 28-10 with two straight 11-2, Mountain West-title seasons. A former Oregon State defensive back, would taking over for Mike Riley be a big enough move coming from BYU? Probably not, but for a coach who's fantastic at respecting traditions and making one-time powerhouses great again, he might be a natural for a name Pac 10 program like ...

The Next Logical Step: Washington head football coach

<http://cfn.scout.com/2/735080.html>

As far as Bronco going to Washington---forget it. I think he'll be around for years to come, but BYU will need to keep his salary at least somewhat competitive.

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by niqmadu - 2008/03/07 15:07

I'll chip in. Pass the hat folks.

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by snoscythe - 2008/03/07 15:43

niqmadu wrote:

I'll chip in. Pass the hat folks.

Join us in the Cougar Club Coaches Circle....you get Legacy II Status for a $5K donation each year for 5 years, and Legacy seats for $1K each year. Good news is that it goes to "all" coaches, so you're helping them keep Rose as well.

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by Cougarageous - 2008/03/07 17:32

snoscythe wrote:

niqmadu wrote:

I'll chip in. Pass the hat folks.

Join us in the Cougar Club Coaches Circle....you get Legacy II Status for a $5K donation each year for 5 years, and Legacy seats for $1K each year. Good news is that it goes to "all" coaches, so you're helping them keep Rose as well.

But even if you can't chip in that amount, I'm sure that any amount you can would be appreciated and go towards keeping our coaches. As they say, every little bit helps. :laugh:

If I didn't live so far away I think I might stand outside of the bookstore on weekends decked in BYU garb and ringing a bell in front of a donation bucket...all proceeds going to keeping our coaches. :) Hey whatever it takes right. :) I would be singing the cougar fight song as well, of course.

Go Cougs!

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by Yndian - 2008/03/07 18:17

Cougarageous wrote:

snoscythe wrote:

niqmadu wrote:

I'll chip in. Pass the hat folks.

Join us in the Cougar Club Coaches Circle....you get Legacy II Status for a $5K donation each year for 5 years, and Legacy seats for $1K each year. Good news is that it goes to "all" coaches, so you're helping them keep Rose as well.

But even if you can't chip in that amount, I'm sure that any amount you can would be appreciated and go towards keeping our coaches. As they say, every little bit helps. :laugh:

If I didn't live so far away I think I might stand outside of the bookstore on weekends decked in BYU garb and ringing a bell in front of a donation bucket...all proceeds going to keeping our coaches. :) Hey whatever it takes right. ;) I would be singing the cougar fight song as well, of course.

Go Cougs!

You'd have to be sure you didn't sing too loud...

(If you don't read the Daily Universe, click here and scroll down to the letter entitled "Chill Out.")

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by gmj81 - 2008/03/08 05:01

There is just no way Bronco is going to be leaving BYU ever. BYU finally started doling out more respectable paychecks to their coaches and while still not crazy-money contracts, they are still very above average and they can be assured that their job is safe as long as they continue to win most of the time.

Besides Bronco never would have come out and said "I'll be here as long as they'll have me" if he thought that it was a possibility at any point in the future that he'd leave. Because then he would look like a phony and wouldn't be keeping his 'word' which we all know is important to him. He expects it of everyone else around him almost as much as he expects it of himself.

Plus he isn't all about the money. He knows what the unique duty of the BYU coach is and he is all about it. No, this guy is a lifer or will at least be manning the helm for another 15 years I'll bet. That actually doesn't seem that long compared to some guys like Lavell, Bowden and Paterno, but that's a nice long college football coaching career for most.

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by akcougar - 2008/03/10 09:15

GO COUGARS!

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by stjohnsmythe - 2008/03/10 11:07

Cougarageous wrote:

But even if you can't chip in that amount, I'm sure that any amount you can would be appreciated and go towards keeping our coaches. As they say, every little bit helps.

Maybe we could do something like this.....

<http://i107.photobucket.com/albums/m318/stjohnsmythe/tithingslip.jpg>

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by Npliam - 2008/03/10 11:10

stjohnsmythe wrote:

Cougarageous wrote:

But even if you can't chip in that amount, I'm sure that any amount you can would be appreciated and go towards keeping our coaches. As they say, every little bit helps.

Maybe we could do something like this.....

<http://i107.photobucket.com/albums/m318/stjohnsmythe/tithingslip.jpg>This might be the funniest post I have ever read. Karma to you!

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by bluesista - 2008/03/11 11:03

Bronco rocks!

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by Methusaleh - 2008/03/13 01:52

gmj81 wrote:

There is just no way Bronco is going to be leaving BYU ever.

This is a dangerous attitude. We can't take things for granted and then expect to be pleased with the results.

Will Bronco leave for another program? Probably not, but let's go out of our way to make him feel appreciated ($$$) just to make sure, no?

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by gmj81 - 2008/03/13 01:58

Is that not what we just did? There's no way of confirming the reports that in only his third year as a head coach he's making around 1 million big ones.

No one is taking anything for granted, especially not Tom Holmoe. But the man said with his very own lips that he'll be at BYU as long they'll have him. I'll take him for his word considering how important promises are to him.

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by Illinois1Cougar - 2008/03/13 08:16

Bronco is a great coach and it would be sad if we werent able to keep him at BYU. Lets not forget his profession is to coach football. Where ever that may be.

=====

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by buzzard - 2008/03/13 10:59

stjohnsmythe wrote:

Cougarageous wrote:

But even if you can't chip in that amount, I'm sure that any amount you can would be appreciated and go towards keeping our coaches. As they say, every little bit helps.

Maybe we could do something like this.....

<http://i107.photobucket.com/albums/m318/stjohnsmythe/tithingslip.jpg>

I propose that some brave soul make up a few hundred of these bad boys, stroll descreetly into some chapels near the Yew, and swap out the "authorized" slips for a stack of these.

On second thought, that might precipiate a few Yewt heart attacks. I'd rather kill them off with a 3-pointer at the buzzer than a harmless prank. ;)

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by WinnemuccaCougar - 2008/03/13 11:29

gmj81 wrote:

There is just no way Bronco is going to be leaving BYU ever. BYU finally started doling out more respectable paychecks to their coaches and while still not crazy-money contracts, they are still very above average and they can be assured that their job is safe as long as they continue to win most of the time.

Besides Bronco never would have come out and said "I'll be here as long as they'll have me" if he thought that it was a possibility at any point in the future that he'd leave. Because then he would look like a phony and wouldn't be keeping his 'word' which we all know is important to him. He expects it of everyone else around him almost as much as he expects it of himself.

Plus he isn't all about the money. He knows what the unique duty of the BYU coach is and he is all about it. No, this guy is a lifer or will at least be manning the helm for another 15 years I'll bet. That actually doesn't seem that long compared to some guys like Lavell, Bowden and Paterno, but that's a nice long college football coaching career for most.

I agree, if any of you have seen the video "Tradition, Spirit, Honor" you would see that it is very unlikely that he goes anywhere else, not imposible if he feels that there could be a missionary opportunity, but unlikely. It isn't hard to see how Collie said he believes God helped him (perform well) make a catch when in this movie Bronco calls the turning point in his first season when they started doing firesides.

He truely loves God and believes in the church. He understands that this is a missionary tool. To non-members but also to those kids who come to the firesides that are members and see that you can be both a good LDS person and a great football player. Not to take anything away from Levell But I don't know that we have ever had this much "Spirit" in a BYU team and coaching staff before, that's just my opinion.

Re:Bronco named #1 non-BCS coach

Posted by cougarfan87 - 2008/03/17 12:54

gmj81 wrote:

Is that not what we just did? There's no way of confirming the reports that in only his third year as a head coach he's making around 1 million big ones.

No one is taking anything for granted, especially not Tom Holmoe. But the man said with his very own lips that he'll be at BYU as long they'll have him. I'll take him for his word considering how important promises are to him.

And what if he interprets "as long as they'll have me" to mean "as long as they pay me what I'm worth, and should they ever decide they do not want to pay me what I am worth, I guess they don't really want me anymore."

Sorry. It's a disease.

