
Kessman suspended

Posted by Hengst - 2008/04/12 19:46

<http://www.greatfallstribune.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20080412/SPORTS/804120311>

Gotta say, i'm not really sad he's gone. For his sake I hope he grows up and does well at Montana, but it's not looking promising.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by niqmadu - 2008/04/12 20:17

ouch....

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Yndian - 2008/04/12 22:30

"We expect our athletes to follow rules on and off the field and show up on time," said Hauck, who hasn't said when Kessman will rejoin the team.

What!? You mean he might have had non-cappuccino-related problems that got him suspended at BYU!?!?!?

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by snoscythe - 2008/04/12 22:33

Geez...who keeps resurrecting year-old threads??? Oh wait....it is a new thread!!

Just waiting to see how Kessman and his dad spin this one. My guess would be anti-Semitism as Ryan felt Saturday practices conflicted with his sabbath :ohmy: .

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Cougfan84 - 2008/04/12 22:51

This kid is above the rules...he has the old T.O. syndrome where he thinks he is more important than his teammates and the team rules. The kid has talent, but definitely needs to grow up...I think he will end up transferring from that school too. I bet Kyle Whittingham gives him a call, the U likes those players that to make mistakes off the field, he could be roommates with Marquis Wilson. Kessman, you need to listen to Collie on this one. If you do things right on and OFF the field...Magic Happens! ;)

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by lawman - 2008/04/12 23:14

Yndian wrote:

"We expect our athletes to follow rules on and off the field and show up on time," said Hauck, who hasn't said when Kessman will rejoin the team.

What!? You mean he might have had non-cappuccino-related problems that got him suspended at BYU!?!?!?

karma for echoing my thoughts!!

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Conosticator - 2008/04/13 01:21

snoscythe wrote:

Geez...who keeps resurrecting year-old threads??? Oh wait....it is a new thread!!

Just waiting to see how Kessman and his dad spin this one. My guess would be anti-Semitism as Ryan felt Saturday practices conflicted with his sabbath :ohmy: .

Well there's always Sacramento City College... :huh:

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Mars - 2008/04/13 14:00

You know what Kessman's motto is:

When life hands you lemons, throw them at little children... maybe then you'll get a good laugh out of it. :S

What a dummy.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by KYCoug - 2008/04/13 15:11

I'm suprised Hawaii hasn't come calling!!!:S

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by ammoncougar1 - 2008/04/13 16:37

KYCoug wrote:

I'm suprised Hawaii hasn't come calling!!!:S

Careful about calling out Hawaii. That just brings out Pipeboy trying to talk (type) like a Bruda.:laugh:

Go Cougs!!!

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by dshelley - 2008/04/13 20:19

The newspaper article doesn't say much. Does anyone know the details?

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by imuakahuku - 2008/04/13 21:07

ammoncougar1 wrote:

KYCoug wrote:

I'm suprised Hawaii hasn't come calling!!!:S

Careful about calling out Hawaii. That just brings out Pipeboy trying to talk (type) like a Bruda.:laugh:

Go Cougs!!!

You mean like a brah.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Hengst - 2008/04/13 21:41

dshelley wrote:

The newspaper article doesn't say much. Does anyone know the details?

Maybe this time it was an orange mocha frapiccino with a shot of espresso on the side ;)

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by jhw5 - 2008/04/14 06:26

dshelley wrote:

The newspaper article doesn't say much. Does anyone know the details?

I agree, but it sounded like he's at least been running late to team meetings, practices, etc.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by JaredCowley - 2008/04/14 09:27

The saddest thing about Kessman isn't that he's a prima donna, spoiled amateur athlete. It's that it seems like he has a father who enables, possibly even encourages his behavior. I don't know all the details obviously, but it seems to me that if Kessman's dad would have tried to be a good parent to his son, instead of a good agent, things may have turned out differently for Kessman.

Jared Cowley

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Slugger - 2008/04/14 09:36

The thing that somewhat puzzles me is, or maybe I should say is a philosophical question...when athletes leave BYU football or are kicked off the team because they either a) violated a team rule/honor code or b) knew they likely would, most often their careers come to a skidding halt entirely. Is this a reflection of each individual athlete and their personal abilities to live by the rules, sacrifice and work hard? Or is it the lingering affects of leaving a religious school with strict behavior expectations (ie, damaged reputation, ego, dignity, self esteem)? Very few have left BYU to go on to productive careers at another college. The Kessman situation seems a bit stupid really, on his part, not the school's. So maybe it was an innocent latte or cup o' joe, the fact is it was a rule that he should have known and signed his name to. Getting upset at BYU for kicking off the team doesn't necessarily mean they are the only school with rules. Rather than learning the lesson and bettering one's self, some of these athletes take out their mistakes on BYU and then go on to...make more mistakes. And unfortunately, by then it may be too late and their college career dreams are gone.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by mountaincougar - 2008/04/14 10:50

Amen to slugger's comments. I don't know what happened but they don't do this without reason. Knew a kid pretty well who BYU recruited several years who was disaster waiting to happen. Well he lasted through Dec or so his freshman year and was gone. No surprise to anyone who knew him. But why did BYU insist on recruiting people who, falling off the rule wagon is just a matter of time, not if at all. I would be interested to hear the why of this one, if anyone knows. It seems last time his dad did all the crying of him to whoever would listen.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by SFCougar - 2008/04/14 11:03

Slugger wrote:

The thing that somewhat puzzles me is, or maybe I should say is a philosophical question...when athletes leave BYU football or are kicked off the team because they either a) violated a team rule/honor code or b) knew they likely would, most often their careers come to a skidding halt entirely. Is this a reflection of each individual athlete and their personal abilities to live by the rules, sacrifice and work hard? Or is it the lingering affects of leaving a religious school with strict behavior expectations (ie, damaged reputation, ego, dignity, self esteem)? Very few have left BYU to go on to productive careers at another college. The Kessman situation seems a bit stupid really, on his part, not the school's. So maybe it was an innocent latte or cup o' joe, the fact is it was a rule that he should have known and signed his name to. Getting upset at BYU for kicking off the team doesn't necessarily mean they are the only school with rules. Rather than learning the lesson and bettering one's self, some of these athletes take out their mistakes on BYU and then go on to...make more mistakes. And unfortunately, by then it may be too late and their college career dreams are gone.

It is not always the case that athletes leave BYU after some mistakes and go on to repeat them. How about Reno Mahe? Didn't he leave after some issues, went to a JC and then came back to have a great BYU career and continues to make it in the NFL? I think it really depends on the character of student-athlete involved.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by frdbtr - 2008/04/14 11:16

Wow, what a quote: "We expect our athletes to follow rules on and off the field and show up on time," said Hauck, who hasn't said when Kessman will rejoin the team.

Seems to me that a lot was made about the Cappacino thing when he was suspended from BYU when everyone knew that he was not suspended for that but was suspended for not coming to practice on time and missing team meetings.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by ammoncougar1 - 2008/04/14 11:22

mountaincougar wrote:

...why did BYU insist on recruiting people who, falling off the rule wagon is just a matter of time, not if at all. I would be interested to hear the why of this one, if anyone knows.

Not to change this to a religious discussion but couldn't the same question be asked of Heavenly Father on behalf of several people we individually know who seemed like they were born with the personality to "fail this life"? And He would probably answer with something related to agency and hope. I can see the point to your question and don't mean to trivialize it with a trite answer but I'm glad we have the staff at BYU who are willing to take some risks even when they seem like dead ends. I would rather see that and see one success story than no risks and zero success stories.

Go Cougs!!!

J. Child
Ammon, ID

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by mountaincougar - 2008/04/14 11:29

While I agree with some of ammoncougars' points, the failures always seem to be thrown back in our faces and affects the university as a whole and , potentially, it's reputation. Without knowing the background of each individual, it is hard to cast an ironclad policy as far the risk goes. But some of them, when we know the type of risk involved, are better off going somewhere else where church funds aren't footing the bill. Just my opinion.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by snoscythe - 2008/04/14 11:35

frdbtr wrote:

Wow, what a quote: "We expect our athletes to follow rules on and off the field and show up on time," said Hauck, who hasn't said when Kessman will rejoin the team.

Seems to me that a lot was made about the Cappacino thing when he was suspended from BYU when everyone knew that he was not suspended for that but was suspended for not coming to practice on time and missing team meetings.

Actually, Kessman was suspended for far more than perpetual tardiness and absenteeism. While it involved a beverage, it was not a cappuccino, and it was not at a Starbucks. However, Kessman could have earned his way back on the team like the other players involved at the party. He and his father chose to instead lie to the media about the incident, which burned any bridges he might have had back to Bronco. If you want to come back to Bronco's team, lying to the media in an attempt to make BYU and BYU football look petty and arrogant is not the way to do it. He was wise to leave after his foolish actions, because he had a LONG way to go to get back into Bronco's good graces.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Real.Men.Wear.Blue - 2008/04/14 11:42

I'm still trying to figure out why this is still such big news. Continuing to post the details of Kessman's travails at Montana will only pump up the already overinflated egos of Ryan and his father, and perptuate interest in the lies that they spread to the media upon his overdue departure. Who cares? The guy couldn't hack it at BYU, and the team is better without him. Apparently he can't hack it at Montana either. I say, who cares? Let's let it go.

=====

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Slugger - 2008/04/14 11:54

SFCougar wrote:

Slugger wrote:

The thing that somewhat puzzles me is, or maybe I should say is a philosophical question...when athletes leave BYU football or are kicked off the team because they either a) violated a team rule/honor code or b) knew they likely would, most often their careers come to a skidding halt entirely. Is this a reflection of each individual athlete and their personal abilities to live by the rules, sacrifice and work hard? Or is it the lingering affects of leaving a religious school with strict behavior expectations (ie, damaged reputation, ego, dignity, self esteem)? Very few have left BYU to go on to productive careers at another college. The Kessman situation seems a bit stupid really, on his part, not the school's. So maybe it was an innocent latte or cup o' joe, the fact is it was a rule that he should have known and signed his name to. Getting upset at BYU for kicking off the team doesn't necessarily mean they are the only school with rules. Rather than learning the lesson and bettering one's self, some of these athletes take out their mistakes on BYU and then go on to...make more mistakes. And unfortunately, by then it may be too late and their college career dreams are gone.

It is not always the case that athletes leave BYU after some mistakes and go on to repeat them. How about Reno Mahe? Didn't he leave after some issues, went to a JC and then came back to have a great BYU career and continues to make it in the NFL? I think it really depends on the character of student-athlete involved.

Like I said, "very few..." not all. Mahe is a great example of a kid that learned from mistakes and matured and bettered himself. There are a few other examples, though I can't name them right now. I just find it interesting from a philosophical and sociological perspective. We all know religion is a powerful influence, for good or for bad. When people make mistakes pertaining to religion they often rebel against that religion and develop hatred for it, which only spreads to other parts of their character and behavior. Just an observational question to throw out there. CJ Ah You went on to have a solid career at Oklahoma and Ofa Moheatau has seen the field alot at Texas Tech. I know not everyone is cut out for BYU, myself included. Lifelong member of the church, graduate of both seminary and institute, served an honorable mission, blah blah blah. But yet I never cared to even apply to BYU. I just knew I would be a better fit somewhere else. I just wish some of these young men had the fortitude and foresight to see how they could mature and grow by making sacrifices, all while getting a great college education and the experience of a lifetime of playing D1 football for a historical program? I guess maybe I expect too much... But sincerely, good luck to Kessman and all those that leave BYU. I have no ill feelings and wish them well.

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Conosticator - 2008/04/14 12:11

snoscythe wrote:

frdbtr wrote:

Wow, what a quote: "We expect our athletes to follow rules on and off the field and show up on time," said Hauck, who hasn't said when Kessman will rejoin the team.

Seems to me that a lot was made about the Cappacino thing when he was suspended from BYU when everyone knew that he was not suspended for that but was suspended for not coming to practice on time and missing team meetings.

Actually, Kessman was suspended for far more than perpetual tardiness and absenteeism. While it involved a beverage, it was not a cappuccino, and it was not at a Starbucks. However, Kessman could have earned his way back on the team like the other players involved at the party. He and his father chose to instead lie to the media about the incident, which burned any bridges he might have had back to Bronco. If you want to come back to Bronco's team, lying to the media in an attempt to make BYU and BYU football look petty and arrogant is not the way to do it. He was wise to leave after his foolish actions, because he had a LONG way to go to get back into Bronco's good graces.

Damn Mountain Dew did it again. :dry:

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by craigocarson - 2008/04/14 12:16

Real.Men.Wear.Blue wrote:

I'm still trying to figure out why this is still such big news. Continuing to post the details of Kessman's travails at Montana will only pump up the already overinflated egos of Ryan and his father, and perptuate interest in the lies that they spread to the media upon his overdue departure. Who cares? The guy couldn't hack it at BYU, and the team is better without him. Apparently he can't hack it at Montana either. I say, who cares? Let's let it go.

I kind of have to make the opposite argument. I say we should care now. For all the flack that BYU caught with Kessman, you'd think that what's happening at Montana would bolster our argument and support how Bronco handled the issue. The more people that hear it, the more it sounds like Kessman was the problem and not BYU (I realize that realistic BYU fans knew who the problem was from the get go, but let's think outside of our biodome and consider the national and recruiting perspective). Considering the fact that we also have had the eclesiatical endorsement issue come up this year too with athletics, I'd prefer that Kessmans dirty laundry be aired for everyone to see. BYU simply is not a hyperrestrictive petri dish where only one type of person can grow; however some people won't grow wherever they go (ala Kessman).

Has the Des News or Tribune made any mention of Kessmann screwing up again? Considering the relative mountain out of a molehill that was made out of the "cappucino gate" incident, you'd think that those papers would be willing to make mention of the fact that Kessmann managed to get in trouble again, at a D1AA school that doesn't even have an honor code; especially the Des News.

It seems to me that by putting out the fact that Kessman managed to break the rules elsewhere supports what happened at BYU and makes it look a lot less like nit picky and petty cappucino issues. Those papers had no problem printing articles about cappucino gate last fall, they should have no problem backing Bronco and his decision making when the object of the controversy screws up at another school.

I dont' expect them to post an editorial about the issue, I think just the fact that Kessman had been suspended at Montana for breaking team rules and a look back at last fall would be an appropriate article. It seems to me that writing such an article is justified and timely.

I don't want to pile on Kessman; obviously the kid has a lot of issues that he has to deal with and it's easier to pity him than dislike the kid; but BYU football is bigger than any player and I'd prefer that if disinformation exists that it be countered by the relative truth. Mentioning that he screwed up again and has been suspended by Montana is fact; you'd think that the local media would want to make mention of that; especially considering they didnt' hesitate to mention the cappucino issues, etc. in the fall.

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by WinnemuccaCougar - 2008/04/14 12:46

mountaincougar wrote:

While I agree with some of ammoncougars' points, the failures always seem to be thrown back in our faces and affects the university as a whole and , potentially, it's reputation. Without knowing the background of each individual, it is hard to cast an ironclad policy as far the risk goes. But some of them, when we know the type of risk involved, are better off going somewhere else where church funds aren't footing the bill. Just my opinion.

I think you would benefit from reading the article done a few years back (I couldn't find it) about the implementation of Bronco's recruiting scheme. He speaks to parents, the recruit, and more importantly the religious leader about the character of the recruit. Whethter that a Father, Minister, Pastor, Rabbi, Bishop (if LDS), or whoever. If these people have been deceived it isn't the schools or their own fault, but the recruits problem.

Although the S.L. Trib loves to embellish potential problems with BYU and the religion behind the school, across the nation it gets minor attention.

Bronco is doing a great deal to ensure that the recruits don't mess up like Crowtons recruits, but you can only do so much. I think that he is doing a fantastic job. He can't help it if the one's closest to the recruit are deceived or even lie to him to get their boy a scholarship.

Re:Kessman suspended

Posted by Isola - 2008/04/14 12:57

Cougfan84 wrote:

...I think he will end up transferring from that school too.

Just one more year of transferring and he will be able to declare for the draft. It is the only thing for him to do with that much talent.

Seriously, I hope he gets his head on straight. There are more talented people who see it all wasted because they can't get over themselves.