

---

Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by stjohmsmythe - 2008/04/16 14:13

---

According to Rick Bucher of ESPN the reason that the Jazz are so dominant at home is:

"It's Salt Lake there's nothing else to do. They're all Mormons and have to be happy with a smile on their face all the time. The Jazz games are their only chance to get vicious."

What an idiotic and ignorant statement

---

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by jhw5 - 2008/04/16 14:25

---

No kidding. I mean, has he ever been to a Y or U competitive event before?

Some people...

---

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by BYUstud... - 2008/04/16 14:32

---

In his defense, he did go on to say that he didn't mean to "paint all Mormons with a broad stroke." He was simply trying to illustrate why Utah is such a tough place to play in th NBA. He really was saying it more as a compliment to Jazz fans for backing their team rather than a knock on Mormons, Salt Lake City, or the Jazz.

....Though the statement was rather ignorant.

---

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by stjohmsmythe - 2008/04/16 14:38

---

BYUstud... wrote:

In his defense, he did go on to say that he didn't mean to "paint all Mormons with a broad stroke." He was simply trying to illustrate why Utah is such a tough place to play in th NBA. He really was saying it more as a compliment to Jazz fans for backing their team rather than a knock on Mormons, Salt Lake City, or the Jazz.

....Though the statement was rather ignorant.

He said he didn't want to paint all mormons with a broad stroke right after he had already done it minutes before and was about to do it again. He also went on to say that the things he's heard from fans at games in salt lake are as bad or worse than any other arena in the NBA. That can be easily explained by the fact that ute fans go to Jazz games.;

---

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by harlinestillopen - 2008/04/16 14:40

---

BYUstud... wrote:

In his defense, he did go on to say that he didn't mean to "paint all Mormons with a broad stroke." He was simply trying to illustrate why Utah is such a tough place to play in th NBA. He really was saying it more as a compliment to Jazz fans for backing their team rather than a knock on Mormons, Salt Lake City, or the Jazz.

....Though the statement was rather ignorant.

Well like they said on Powerhouse (formerly A game) He said he didn't want to paint all Mormons with a broad stroke. But he did. Its like me calling someone stupid, then saying, "not that I think your stupid or anything"

---

=====

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Cougfan84 - 2008/04/16 14:58

---

Ric Bucher is such a pompus windbag. I've watched him on espn before and I had to shut it off. Hes a red headed stepchild that thinks he knows everything about basketball, but really doesn't. The real reason the Jazz are good at home is because they have a dynamic and deep young team. Young teams don't always fare very well on the road. Plus they get great fan support at home. I think the Jazz are 1-2 years more of experience, along with the addition of a low post defender from being the best road team on top of being the best home team. The Jazz have a legitimate shot at the title this year but I see some really great chances to get at least one championship in the next 5 years if they stay healthy and can keep their team together.

---

=====

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Isola - 2008/04/16 15:50

---

stjohnsmythe wrote:

According to Rick Beuker of ESPN the reason that the Jazz are so dominant at home is:

"It's Salt Lake there's nothing else to do. They're all Mormons and have to be happy with a smile on their face all the time. The Jazz games are their only chance to get vicious."

What an idiotic and ignorant statement

Its definately something that he shouldn't have said, but I thought you were going to say that none of the other fans wanted to travel to Utah because of the close minded people and stupid liquor laws. That's usually the reason given by other MWC fans as to why the MWC Tournament can't be held in the ESA. That and because it would give to much of an advantage to BYU and Utah, but playing in the T&M doesn't give UNLV that big of an advantage.

So Bucher shouldn't have said it, but it could have been worse. When explaining why a team has such a home court/field advantage, just say it is because the fans are passionate about their sports. The other explanations tend to be offensive.

---

=====

Re:Rick Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by stjohnsmythe - 2008/04/16 17:23

---

man...someone dock my karma for badly misspelling bucher's last name on the thread subject.

---

=====

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Gunk - 2008/04/16 17:55

---

stjohnsmythe wrote:

BYUstud... wrote:

In his defense, he did go on to say that he didn't mean to "paint all Mormons with a broad stroke." He was simply trying to illustrate why Utah is such a tough place to play in th NBA. He really was saying it more as a compliment to Jazz fans for backing their team rather than a knock on Mormons, Salt Lake City, or the Jazz.

....Though the statement was rather ignorant.

He said he didn't want to paint all mormons with a broad stroke right after he had already done it minutes before and was about to do it again. He also went on to say that the things he's heard from fans at games in salt lake are as bad or worse than any other arena in the NBA. That can be easily explained by the fact that ute fans go to Jazz games.;

Worst racial epithets from fans I have ever heard at a sporting event were at a Jazz game. Couldn't believe my ears.

---

Made me real embarrassed to be a member of the church. I know not everyone that goes to Jazz games are Mormon, but Utah and Mormons go together, so whatever Jazz fans do gets categorized as being related to Mormons.

Honestly, I agree with Beuker. Look at church basketball. The same high councilman preaching charity on Sunday is yelling on Wednesday at the refs who are members in his stake and starting fights with other ward's team. For some reason competitive basketball brings out the worst in Mormons and I don't think Jazz games are any exception.

Watch my Karma take a nose dive now.

---

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by NC-Puma - 2008/04/16 18:28

Gunk wrote:

stjohnsmythe wrote:

BYUstud... wrote:

In his defense, he did go on to say that he didn't mean to "paint all Mormons with a broad stroke." He was simply trying to illustrate why Utah is such a tough place to play in th NBA. He really was saying it more as a compliment to Jazz fans for backing their team rather than a knock on Mormons, Salt Lake City, or the Jazz.

....Though the statement was rather ignorant.

He said he didn't want to paint all mormons with a broad stroke right after he had already done it minutes before and was about to do it again. He also went on to say that the things he's heard from fans at games in salt lake are as bad or worse than any other arena in the NBA. That can be easily explained by the fact that ute fans go to Jazz games.;

Worst racial epithets from fans I have ever heard at a sporting event were at a Jazz game. Couldn't believe my ears. Made me real embarrassed to be a member of the church. I know not everyone that goes to Jazz games are Mormon, but Utah and Mormons go together, so whatever Jazz fans do gets categorized as being related to Mormons.

Honestly, I agree with Beuker. Look at church basketball. The same high councilman preaching charity on Sunday is yelling on Wednesday at the refs who are members in his stake and starting fights with other ward's team. For some reason competitive basketball brings out the worst in Mormons and I don't think Jazz games are any exception.

Watch my Karma take a nose dive now.

I have to agree here. Basketball is like Mormon carnival. We let loose our worst behaviors.. well maybe not 'worst' but close.

---

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Metal Bubba - 2008/04/16 21:58

I went to several Jazz games when I was at BYU in the early 90s. I did not witness anything unusual. Must be the people in the good seats acting like that! :ohmy:

---

Re:Rick Beuker on Colin Cowherd

Posted by detmer4prez - 2008/04/17 00:34

NC-Puma wrote:

Gunk wrote:

Honestly, I agree with Beuker. Look at church basketball. The same high councilman preaching charity on Sunday is yelling on Wednesday at the refs who are members in his stake and starting fights with other ward's team. For some reason competitive basketball brings out the worst in Mormons and I don't think Jazz games are any exception.

---

Watch my Karma take a nose dive now.

I have to agree here. Basketball is like Mormon carnival. We let loose our worst behaviors.. well maybe not 'worst' but close.

Yup. They don't make movies about our church ball for nothing. This may be a case of we can make fun of ourselves but if someone else does it we get upset.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Real.Men.Wear.Blue - 2008/04/17 09:05

---

We don't have church basketball in my stake--and haven't had it for years--for that very reason.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by declocoug - 2008/04/17 10:44

Real.Men.Wear.Blue wrote:

We don't have church basketball in my stake--and haven't had it for years--for that very reason.

that's too bad. We just finished an awesome tourney.

=====

Re:Rick Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by stjohmsmythe - 2008/04/17 11:46

detmer4prez wrote:

Yup. They don't make movies about our church ball for nothing. This may be a case of we can make fun of ourselves but if someone else does it we get upset.

My problem with the whole thing was that he first makes a broad and innaccurate generalization about "the mormons" and then proceeds to make a completely ignorant statment, as if it were fact, about there being nothing to do in Utah besides go to Jazz games. He has clearly never spent any substantial amount of time in Utah, unless by "nothing else to do" he means there is slightly less alchohol and not as many strip clubs as there are in other cities. But hey, why do any research when you can throw out an old stereotype. Very professional Ric :dry:

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Gunk - 2008/04/18 11:54

Real.Men.Wear.Blue wrote:

We don't have church basketball in my stake--and haven't had it for years--for that very reason.

We don't have it in mine either because of all the fights and some bishop decided to flagrantly foul someone resulting in a broken nose and a bloody mess.

It's funny too because I open the gym up on Thursday for ball. The only ones that show up to play aren't members of the church. I'm the only white dude. Anytime someone has a question as to why there are "suspicious" looking people in the church they seek out the only white dude and ask, "Are you the priesthood authority here?" Why can't the guy with the pony tail be the priesthood authority? Or what about the black guy with a nice clean hair cut? We're all in shorts and t-shirts.

Not only that, but no one in the ward wants to come play because all the "scary" people are there. I never had a problem with any of the "scary" people until one day a ward memeber shows up and what does he do? He starts a fight! I had to kick my own ward memeber out of the church!

---

I don't know what it is but too many Mormons struggle with just playing a friendly game of basketball. I'm all for competitive sport, but it's just for fun. There are no salaries, no awards, and our wives don't even show up to watch us because they get too embarrassed by our behavior.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by jaga97 - 2008/04/18 12:05

---

Ward ball is not different than any other amatuer sporting event. Amatuers take more pride and give more effort than 99% of professional athletes. I played city league softball in a league with no Mormons and for some reason there was always someone getting thrown out for fighting or jawing with the umpire. I also had my life threatened for kicking the trash out of some kids at Magic Mountain in basketball.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by PP3 - 2008/04/18 12:21

---

jaga97 wrote:

Ward ball is not different than any other amatuer sporting event. Amatuers take more pride and give more effort than 99% of professional athletes. I played city league softball in a league with no Mormons and for some reason there was always someone getting thrown out for fighting or jawing with the umpire. I also had my life threatened for kicking the trash out of some kids at Magic Mountain in basketball.

I appreciate the input, its nice to know acting like a fool at an amatuer sporting event is not limited to churchball.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Hengst - 2008/04/18 12:41

---

PP3 wrote:

jaga97 wrote:

Ward ball is not different than any other amatuer sporting event. Amatuers take more pride and give more effort than 99% of professional athletes. I played city league softball in a league with no Mormons and for some reason there was always someone getting thrown out for fighting or jawing with the umpire. I also had my life threatened for kicking the trash out of some kids at Magic Mountain in basketball.

I appreciate the input, its nice to know acting like a fool at an amatuer sporting event is not limited to churchball.

That's why our CB football games were so fun, we had absolutely none of that. Too bad we haven't been able to restart them yet :-( (the flag stuff doesn't count!)

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by stuckinbig10country - 2008/04/18 13:08

---

Any time you start a sentence with the phrase "I'm not a _____ (racist, sexist, etc.), but...", the next thing out of your mouth proves that you are. I don't know why people think that if they use a qualifying statement, such as "I don't want to paint all Mormon's with a broad brush", that it completely eleviates any culpability on their part.

Now, I don't want want to lump all reporters together, but they tend to be arrogant punks who think they know everything and must educate us stupid people. They also tend to think they are above the law, and should be able to write what they want, without having to disclose sources, and write things in such a negative manner because they want to appear "unbiased". They need to come down from their ivory tower, and actually report the facts and not their version of the facts.

---

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by NorthernCougar - 2008/04/18 13:43

Gunk wrote:

Real.Men.Wear.Blue wrote:

We don't have church basketball in my stake--and haven't had it for years--for that very reason.

We don't have it in mine either because of all the fights and some bishop decided to flagrantly foul someone resulting in a broken nose and a bloody mess.

It's funny too because I open the gym up on Thursday for ball. The only ones that show up to play aren't members of the church. I'm the only white dude. Anytime someone has a question as to why there are "suspicious" looking people in the church they seek out the only white dude and ask, "Are you the priesthood authority here?" Why can't the guy with the pony tail be the priesthood authority? Or what about the black guy with a nice clean hair cut? We're all in shorts and t-shirts.

Not only that, but no one in the ward wants to come play because all the "scary" people are there. I never had a problem with any of the "scary" people until one day a ward memeber shows up and what does he do? He starts a fight! I had to kick my own ward memeber out of the church!

I don't know what it is but too many Mormons struggle with just playing a friendly game of basketball. I'm all for competitive sport, but it's just for fun. There are no salaries, no awards, and our wives don't even show up to watch us because they get too embarrassed by our behavior.

That is why I gave up the game about 9 years ago when we moved into our current house.

This past season our YM were playing and one of the priests said something to a group watching the game. I don't remember what was said but they thought it was profane and went ballistic. The husband of the wife who heard the comment verbally attacked the kid and made a complete fool of himself and his wife. They ended up leaving on their own, but I think they were close to being thrown out. The problem is very rarely the youth, it is almost always the parents or those "adults" participating or watching. I am not sure what the answer is but it is because of these morons that I don't like church basketball anymore.

---

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Gunk - 2008/04/21 09:46

NorthernCougar wrote:

Gunk wrote:

Real.Men.Wear.Blue wrote:

We don't have church basketball in my stake--and haven't had it for years--for that very reason.

We don't have it in mine either because of all the fights and some bishop decided to flagrantly foul someone resulting in a broken nose and a bloody mess.

It's funny too because I open the gym up on Thursday for ball. The only ones that show up to play aren't members of the church. I'm the only white dude. Anytime someone has a question as to why there are "suspicious" looking people in the church they seek out the only white dude and ask, "Are you the priesthood authority here?" Why can't the guy with the pony tail be the priesthood authority? Or what about the black guy with a nice clean hair cut? We're all in shorts and t-shirts.

Not only that, but no one in the ward wants to come play because all the "scary" people are there. I never had a problem with any of the "scary" people until one day a ward memeber shows up and what does he do? He starts a fight! I had to kick my own ward memeber out of the church!

I don't know what it is but too many Mormons struggle with just playing a friendly game of basketball. I'm all for competitive sport, but it's just for fun. There are no salaries, no awards, and our wives don't even show up to watch us because they get too embarrassed by our behavior.

That is why I gave up the game about 9 years ago when we moved into our current house.

This past season our YM were playing and one of the priests said something to a group watching the game. I don't remember what was said but they thought it was profane and went ballistic. The husband of the wife who heard the comment verbally attacked the kid and made a complete fool of himself and his wife. They ended up leaving on their own, but I think they were close to being thrown out. The problem is very rarely the youth, it is almost always the parents or those "adults" participating or watching. I am not sure what the answer is but it is because of these morons that I don't like church basketball anymore.

Totally agree on the parents/adult thing. I never had or saw a problem playing youth basketball, but in the same stake on the adult team...plenty of problems. And now that I think about it, there were some rather angry parents watching our youth games.

My personal opinion is as adults we don't get to compete in sports as much as we used to or want to. Many of us played competitively in high school or college so when given the chance we take it way too seriously. Those players that I play with on weekly pickup game basis never have outbursts compared to those who only play sports when the stake league starts up.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by COUGARSTU - 2008/04/21 10:34

David Letterman asked Hulk Hogan (before he was Hollywood) what was the craziest thing he had ever done? Answer: "Mormon Ball"

I still love church ball and just smile inside when the idiots go ballistic. That's hard to do when they are on your own team but it seems like it works better to ignore them than to try to calm them down/kick them out.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Sage - 2008/04/21 11:29

Now, I don't want want to lump all reporters together, but they tend to be arrogant punks who think they know everything and must educate us stupid people. They also tend to think

Now... but... worked right in there.

=====

Re:Ric Bucher on Colin Cowherd

Posted by Sage - 2008/04/21 11:49

This is very interesting reading. It is very apparent who has experience elsewhere and who thinks Church ball is unique. I have officiated and coached in 4 different states, (my wife even played for a bar that sponsored the team in NY) and it goes on everywhere. The reason church ball gets such a bad rap is because the members are supposed to know better. We assume we should hold ourselves to a higher standard.

I don't like bad things to happen on the court, and I have noticed good officiating really makes a difference, but it certainly is not unique to church ball. The observation that the prima donnas of the NBA do this or that, only shows human nature is improperly displaying itself there also. I would much rather officiate church ball to city league. It has a lot more reward for me. I don't mind too much doing High School, but city is worse.

We recently got through with our region turny. The sportsmanship was rather good. If there are legitimate consequences for poor behavior, people don't want to hurt their team.

Officials have bad days too. Sometimes as a player the rim is 6 feet wide, and sometimes it has a lid on it or the ball is covered in vaseline. In the simi-final game this year I had a terrible day. I even commented to my fellow official that I just couldn't get into it. I apologized to both teams, but they were both good about it. I did a poor job of officiating, I knew it, they knew it, and they took it with good sportsmanship. One of them did start to comment and his team jumped him. Especially after I warned him. I knew I was not doing a good job...but I tried to. So, people can choose how they act. I didn't favor either team and they were pleased to seem me at the finals (well, as pleased as anybody can be at officials)

---

Bad sportsmanship is not unique to Mormon ball, we should just expect better of ourselves.

=====