
Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by TimO - 2008/04/22 12:26

Perhaps we should also start a pre-game ritual as a body of fans the night before a game. Not like the 12th man stuff at A&M that wouldn't be original, i guess that doesn't matter, but when the MTN (or was it cstv/vs?) had their evening pregame show at BYU it had tons more people than at any other venue, perhaps we could have cheers, play football, contests, t-christensen-ism t shirts, Lavell is my homeboy hats, free food etc...get us pumped up-as well as have the Michael Scott Wear "only" Blue awareness to cure rabies (or something)

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by CougarPokes - 2008/04/22 14:16

Like a pep rally? only with free stuff...I'd be down

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by yutka - 2008/04/22 18:59

Maybe we could get a local grocery chain to sponsor the pep rally... they could rotate it between locations around the valley each home game. They could get Greg Wrubel to come in and hype fans up and give some game tickets and other KSL/BYU items... there could be cheap hotdogs and a football toss... maybe a little train to ride for the kids? Maybe some other games... not only would it hype BYU but would be good for business... I'll call my local Maceys Grocery store and see if they would have interest... it seems like a perfect fit.:dry:

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by BYUROCKS - 2008/04/22 19:03

yutka wrote:

Maybe we could get a local grocery chain to sponsor the pep rally... they could rotate it between locations around the valley each home game. They could get Greg Wrubel to come in and hype fans up and give some game tickets and other KSL/BYU items... there could be cheap hotdogs and a football toss... maybe a little train to ride for the kids? Maybe some other games... not only would it hype BYU but would be good for business... I'll call my local Maceys Grocery store and see if they would have interest... it seems like a perfect fit.:dry:

rofl maybe it would ;) ;)

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by McGregor - 2008/04/22 20:14

I'm glad Texas A&M as mentioned. They have three traditions that I would be in full favor of BYU adopting:

1. Fans show up early
 2. Fans stand up to cheer
 3. Fans stay the entire game
- =====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by craigscarson - 2008/04/22 20:19

McGregor wrote:

I'm glad Texas A&M as mentioned. They have three traditions that I would be in full favor of BYU adopting:

1. Fans show up early
2. Fans stand up to cheer
3. Fans stay the entire game

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Aggie_Bonfire

I prefer that we not build large wooden bonfires that end up killing students though.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by kenj - 2008/04/22 20:40

I like the one where you stand until we score and then kiss the girl you brought. Great idea. Go Cougs score alot so I can

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by azcavalier - 2008/04/22 22:11

I wish that they would have some rockin' way to bring the team out onto the field prior to the game. For example, here at Virginia Tech, they always play the beginning part of "Enter Sandman" (from Metallica, for those who don't know), and the crowd gets ROCKING. They're jumping up and down in the stands like "pocorn popping" but it's more menacing. And the noise goes up, and it builds until the place seems like it's going to explode...which is does when the team rushes the field. It gives you goosebumps. Also, and this is the biggest benefit, it's done so well that the stadium is packed at that point. Everyone rushes to the stadium to get to their seats because they don't want to miss "Enter Sandman".

I'd love to see BYU play the opening part of a song like AC/DC's "Thunderstruck" to bring in some noise from the crowd. If you disagree, then find the track and listen to the first 30 seconds, while imagining Cougar Stadium getting pumped for the team to come out. It would rock.

Of course, this isn't something that the fans really have any control over. This would have to be instituted by the athletic department.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by gmj81 - 2008/04/22 22:24

Agreed. A&M has some of the best tradition of any school in the country. What I have been wanting to see started is a night-before-the-game-pep-rally. I went to one in College Station once. About 15-20,000 people showed up, mostly students. Granted they have about twice as many students enrolled as BYU but we also have alot less to do one Friday nights and I think we could easily get more than just the students to come.

But essentially, the yellleaders lead the thing and they practice chears, some of the players may show up and also help to encourage the fans, and then after about a 20-30 minute rally, the lights in the stadium shut off and you're supposed to kiss your neighbor. We wouldn't have to do everything just like A&M but I think that would be alot of fun and would be a good show of support to the players. And it's almost like gameday starting the night before so the next 12-18 hours are all about preparing for the game. Who knows, maybe with that mindset preparation, we could actually get fans to show up on time to the games instead of filling in all through the first quarter.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by CWC - 2008/04/22 23:50

How about every games during pre-game warmups when the bigscreen counts down to 10 minutes before kickoff, we all take off hysterically running out of the stadium jumping over walls and stuff! ;)

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by TimO - 2008/04/23 12:49

yutka wrote:

Maybe we could get a local grocery chain to sponsor the pep rally... they could rotate it between locations around the valley each home game. They could get Greg Wrubel to come in and hype fans up and give some game tickets and other KSL/BYU items... there could be cheap hotdogs and a football toss... maybe a little train to ride for the kids? Maybe some other games... not only would it hype BYU but would be good for business... I'll call my local Maceys Grocery store and see if they would have interest... it seems like a perfect fit.:dry:

ya, i was hoping nobody would bring that up-my bro and i go to almost every one but it's mainly for young kids and moms. the food is cheap/free but not good enough to get Wrubell, certainly good enough to get Doug Wright though. It's cool to win tickets, but not a fully invested thing at all.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by imuakahuku - 2008/04/23 12:55

How about we get all the fans to join in the pregame haka? Or we could make one up and call it the raka! Or have just the Ute fans do it and call it the kaka. :blink:

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by McGregor - 2008/04/23 13:06

kenj wrote:

I like the one where you stand until we score and then kiss the girl you brought. Great idea. Go Cougs score alot so I can

I LOVED that tradition when attending a Texas A&M game.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by bengel - 2008/04/23 15:27

I'd like to see that tradition at BYU. Of course, all kisses on campus must be consistent with the Honor Code and the Miracle of Forgiveness. :blink:

Kenj, do I detect a parenthetical "score a lot" at the end of your comment? Sorry, but I think you should be on you own for that.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by CrimsonCoug - 2008/04/23 15:32

It'd help the unofficial goal of a high rate of marriages among the student body, anyway.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by imuakahuku - 2008/04/23 15:34

CrimsonCoug wrote:

It'd help the unofficial goal of a high rate of marriages among the student body, anyway.

Or an huge increase in breakups if he is not standing next to her but some other her! :ohmy:

"But honey, I thought it was you! It was dark!"

or better yet

"But honey, I was thinking of you the whole time!"

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by lovelldog - 2008/04/23 15:43

kenj wrote:

I like the one where you stand until we score and then kiss the girl you brought. Great idea. Go Cougs score alot so I can

How about kiss the girl you brought until we score our first points of the game. That will make sure the guys at least get to the game on time.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by bengel - 2008/04/23 16:22

Maybe we should kiss the girl we brought like the ROTC does pushups, one for every point.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by Beaveroug - 2008/04/23 17:13

Was there anyone else that traveled to UCLA last year? I was there and was instantly digusted with what we at LES consider tailgating. They had miles of tents, small versions of resturants, games etc. After seeing that I have to say that if we are going to start a new tradition lets start by filling up the that huge green field west of the staduim with tailgaters instead of cars.

Oh another one really quick. How about we start a tradition that fans show up before kick off and not continue to filter in during the first and second quarters!!!!!!!!!!!!!! I know we have to prepare for the sabbath on Saturday but it is getting ridiculous.

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by imuakahuku - 2008/04/24 06:49

Beaveroug wrote:

Was there anyone else that traveled to UCLA last year? I was there and was instantly digusted with what we at LES consider tailgating. They had miles of tents, small versions of resturants, games etc. After seeing that I have to say that if we are going to start a new tradition lets start by filling up the that huge green field west of the staduim with tailgaters instead of cars.

Oh another one really quick. How about we start a tradition that fans show up before kick off and not continue to filter in during the first and second quarters!!!!!!!!!!!!!! I know we have to prepare for the sabbath on Saturday but it is getting ridiculous.

How about free Jello salad for everyone there before kickoff? The RS for the student wards can be in charge! :)

=====

Re:Fans to start a new tradition?

Posted by gordito - 2008/04/24 07:40

bengel wrote:

Maybe we should kiss the girl we brought like the ROTC does pushups, one for every point.

That sounds about right, but instead of one kiss for every point, let's do one second of kissing for every point.

What do I care though, the last few games I went to I was sitting by my dad and the blue hairs. I'll do my part now though and start the tradition with my wife watching at home.

=====