Unless Craft beats him out.

Cowan is out for the year.

UCLA is going to be a mess next year. For our sake, they need to figure out a way to compete in the Pac 10 or they're looking at a Notre dame type season next year.

I expect heavy doses of their running game against us in Provo. (To be honest, I'd expect them to try our young secondary on the road; but their very inexperienced receiver corps + risk of turnovers and our scary pass rush will keep UCLA very honest).

Considering our prolific offense and the fact that we're playing at home, I don't expect that it'll be terribly competitive. They really don't have any weapons returning except running backs and linemen.

Their defense will be young and disjointed (although certainly still fast) playing at our house: we should be able to use misdirection to our advantage as there's simply no way that their defense will be mature enough (skillwise, experience and agewise) to be in the right place at the right time.

I hope we don't resort to simply trying to run over them though. That will work against 1/2 our schedule but not our pac 10 opponents. The fact that we may be capable of doing so though make it that much harder to game plan for us.

ya...This is how everybody was thinking before the bowl game. Remember how that turned out. If BYU doesn't come to play, and play hard, they will lose the game. I just hope n pray that the team will be focused for each game. (I know it sounds lame, but it is "one game at a time" to succeed.)

Doesn't sound lame at all.

How does a QB get hurt in practice? don't they not take hits?

I wouldn't underestimate the Bruins so much. They always have good athletes, and would compete in the MWC even in down years. And Neuheisel and Chow are no fools. They are the types who can do a lot with little to work with. Who knows, Chow may even be able to make something out of Olson.

Their no confidence vote in Ben last week turned out to be premature then.

I'm not sure, but my guess would be that Cooper could tell you.

I think Ben O is simply injury prone. Some guys have bodies that can take the movements and hits and others don't. Yes Cooper was bending over looking over looking to recover the ball when he went down. Or just bad luck. Who knows? I heard the Cooper and Sam Doman were walking on at Oregon. Anyone know how that went? I understand that Doman shifted to TE. That was something BYU tried to get him to do but he refused (I guess refused as it never happened). He was not a QB.

Go Cougs!!!

Probably Doman looked at the TE competition at BYU and Oregon while making that decision. B)

Funny thing is that he couldn't seem to get over not being able to play QB in college so he tranfers to a school where he thinks the competition is "open" and where he has to walk on to do so. Not only does he still get moved to TE, but he loses the scholarship he had while at BYU. On top of that, if you're going to be a TE, who's going to make you a better one, BYU or Oregon? Some kids just can't seem to exercise a little patience. I know the writing was on the wall with Max being the starter but you never know when the starter will go down. Four years may seem like a long time to play but it goes pretty quick when you keep transferring from one school to another chasing the "open competition at your position".

It might not be Olson after all.

We could end up facing Prince (not the singer, although maybe UCLA aught to give him a shot at QB too).

UCLA is desperate story.

i just hope that they come in like miami did with disrespect and such, i want to do more than beat a team like them, i want to destroy them so badly we destroy everyrthing about them (they can win all other games to help us) but as long as olson gets a helmet in the gut (dwight: Coutesy of butch cassidy) i'll be happy and content

A blowout of UCLA would be nice. But if the kicker becomes the starting QB because of injury or unconsciousness due to hyperventilation, I would feel a little guilt for picking on such a team. About that "." much! :)

Rumor has it that they did offer Prince back in the day... but had to retract the offer because the team manager couldn't figure out how to put his name, "The artist formerly known as Prince" on the back of the jersey, and Prince didn't like the suggestion of abbreviating it to "BS". :dry:
