
On the bright side...

Posted by Yndian - 2008/04/29 22:48

At least the Suns will save a lot of money on next year's tax return from all the charitable donations they made to the Spurs during the playoffs.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by Delta534 - 2008/04/29 23:42

Yndian wrote:

At least the Suns will save a lot of money on next year's tax return from all the charitable donations they made to the Spurs during the playoffs.

yes...but the queston is---can my celtics win two games and close out atlanta. the celtcs have played terrible.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by snoscythe - 2008/04/30 07:33

And to think my Mavs traded away their future to keep up with the Suns. Well, at least the trade worked if all they were looking to do was keep pace with Phoenix.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by WACoug - 2008/04/30 08:23

snoscythe wrote:

And to think my Mavs traded away their future to keep up with the Suns. Well, at least the trade worked if all they were looking to do was keep pace with Phoenix.

After seeing Chris Paul flat out embarrass Jason Kidd in that series I have to think that they would have been better off with Devin Harris. Harris is much quicker than Kidd and a much better defender. Kidd was definitely a player in his day, but talk about passing the torch, wow.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by stuckinbig10country - 2008/04/30 08:37

WACoug wrote:

snoscythe wrote:

And to think my Mavs traded away their future to keep up with the Suns. Well, at least the trade worked if all they were looking to do was keep pace with Phoenix.

After seeing Chris Paul flat out embarrass Jason Kidd in that series I have to think that they would have been better off with Devin Harris. Harris is much quicker than Kidd and a much better defender. Kidd was definitely a player in his day, but talk about passing the torch, wow.

Jason Kidd has always been overrated. You don't move to as many different teams as he has without being overrated (obvious exception is Shaq, but we can see that he's lost a few steps).

The best point guards in the NBA (in no particular order) are Deron Williams, Chris Paul, and Tony Parker. If I had to pick one right now, it would probably be Tony Parker, but the other two will catch him sooner or later.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by Metallicat - 2008/04/30 09:51

I think the suns would have been better off with Marion. Shaq is a shell of what he used to be.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by WACoug - 2008/04/30 10:26

stuckinbig10country wrote:

WACoug wrote:

snoscythe wrote:

And to think my Mavs traded away their future to keep up with the Suns. Well, at least the trade worked if all they were looking to do was keep pace with Phoenix.

After seeing Chris Paul flat out embarrass Jason Kidd in that series I have to think that they would have been better off with Devin Harris. Harris is much quicker than Kidd and a much better defender. Kidd was definitely a player in his day, but talk about passing the torch, wow.

Jason Kidd has always been overrated. You don't move to as many different teams as he has without being overrated (obvious exception is Shaq, but we can see that he's lost a few steps).

The best point guards in the NBA (in no particular order) are Deron Williams, Chris Paul, and Tony Parker. If I had to pick one right now, it would probably be Tony Parker, but the other two will catch him sooner or later.

Always overrated?? :ohmy: I guess you can have that oppinion. I would say that having the third most triple doubles on the NBA all time list behind only Oscar Robertson and Magic Johnson is evidence of a pretty good player. That stat alone might get him into the Hall of Fame.

http://www.nba.com/features/kidd_tripledoubles.html

Now I would agree that for the past few years he has been overrated. But always overrated? I think that is a stretch.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by stuckinbig10country - 2008/04/30 10:31

Is it me, or has the quality of officiating in the playoffs just been horrendous. As a Jazz fan, I'm only going to point out the two basket interference calls over the last two games because I may be too biased in that series to do it justice. My biggest concern is not that the refs are making mistakes on hard calls, its that they are making them on simple calls, like out of bounds and basket interference.

In the Spurs-Suns game last night, it was either on back to back trips, or two trips out of three, where Spurs players TRIPPED THEMSELVES, and were awarded with foul calls. In the one with Duncan you can see the official that made the call in one of the replays, and he wasn't even looking at the play. He was looking off ball, and just made the call when Duncan fell down. Terrible, just terrible.

Any game that Steve Javie officiates for the Jazz will be poorly called, so I kind of throw those ones out because its obviously a personal thing between him and Jerry Sloan. On the other hand, Bevetta, who blew several calls against the Jazz in the Finals 10 years ago, does seem to want to make amends and does show a little favoritism towards the team he stole a game or two from.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by Yndian - 2008/04/30 11:23

stuckinbig10country wrote:

Is it me, or has the quality of officiating in the playoffs just been horrendous. As a Jazz fan, I'm only going to point out the two basket interference calls over the last two games because I may be too biased in that series to do it justice. My biggest concern is not that the refs are making mistakes on hard calls, its that they are making them on simple calls, like out of bounds and basket interference.

In the Spurs-Suns game last night, it was either on back to back trips, or two trips out of three, where Spurs players TRIPPED THEMSELVES, and were awarded with foul calls. In the one with Duncan you can see the official that made the call in one of the replays, and he wasn't even looking at the play. He was looking off ball, and just made the call when Duncan fell down. Terrible, just terrible.

After every game, I'm sure that I'll never again be surprised at the suckiness of the refs, but every game they seem intent on proving me wrong.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by walkair05 - 2008/04/30 11:23

I have to say that suns game was the worse officiating I have ever seen. I do hate the spurs but I am not a suns fan. Every call was going for the spurs it was knuckleheaded terrible.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by jaga97 - 2008/04/30 11:27

The suns trade was one of the worst blunders I have ever seen in professional sports. Shawn Marion was the best player on their team in my opinion. Shaq is a has been and does not really care about winning another championship by his own effort.

I laughed at the Dallas and Phoenix trades but I am not laughing about the Lakers trade that will do the Jazz in next round.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by MajorCougar - 2008/04/30 11:40

stuckinbig10country wrote:

Any game that Steve Javie officiates for the Jazz will be poorly called, so I kind of throw those ones out because its obviously a personal thing between him and Jerry Sloan.

As soon as they announced who the officials were last night, and heard Steve Javie's name on the crew, I knew the Jazz would automatically be playing 5 on 6... :dry:

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by jaga97 - 2008/04/30 11:40

Did the refs help Phoenix miss 17 free throws out of 37?

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by stuckinbig10country - 2008/04/30 12:04

jaga97 wrote:

Did the refs help Phoenix miss 17 free throws out of 33?

No. Nor did they cause Steve Nash to throw a bounce pass to Diaw's ankle, nor did it cause Diaw to airmail the ball to the Spurs bench. Phoenix had every chance to win the game. I'm just pointing out that the officiating has become unbearable. It effects all teams about the same.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by LaytonCougar - 2008/04/30 12:16

MajorCougar wrote:

stuckinbig10country wrote:

Any game that Steve Javie officiates for the Jazz will be poorly called, so I kind of throw those ones out because its obviously a personal thing between him and Jerry Sloan.

As soon as they announced who the officials were last night, and heard Steve Javie's name on the crew, I knew the Jazz would automatically be playing 5 on 6... :dry:

I was listening to one of the sports radio stations and the sports beat writer for the Jazz (I can't remember his name for the life of me) said that Steve Javie asked to officiate the game. He basically went on and said because of that he thought the series would be returning to Salt Lake City. It is almost like the Jazz thought the same thing because they played horrendous. They got beat in every phase of the game.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by dlouc - 2008/04/30 12:21

I hate, hate, hate discussions about how bad referees are.

With that out of the way I can say that I completely agree that refs in the NBA have ruined every level of basketball there is simply because the way they alter the game in the little calls has altered every little kid who is trying to "be like Mike (or anybody else in the league)!!!

Case in point: a "shooting foul" is when someone is shooting and gets fouled, not gets fouled and then shoots! :huh: I can't stand those types of calls!

fhew. I at least feel a little better.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by Metallicat - 2008/04/30 13:00

After getting completely frustrated last night as my favorite team (the Jazz) and my distant second favorite (the suns)...I really don't even know what to say about those games. All I know is that I decided that if I continue to let sports get me this upset I'm going to have a heart attack at thirty. And this was mild compared to what I go through during BYU football.

PS sorry if that came out of the blue, but I might need an intervention at some point.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by Yndian - 2008/04/30 14:29

jaga97 wrote:

Did the refs help Phoenix miss 17 free throws out of 33?

As I implied at the start of the thread, the Suns completely gave away the whole series (in particular games 1 and 5). They had every reason to win, then managed to pull defeat from the jaws of victory by means of an incredible display of ineptitude and chokery.

That being said, just because the refs didn't cost them the series, that doesn't mean they (the refs) weren't horrible.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by nuk13 - 2008/04/30 15:17

walkair05 wrote:

I have to say that suns game was the worse officiating I have ever seen. I do hate the spurs but I am not a suns fan. Every call was going for the spurs it was knuckleheaded terrible.

Is this 2007? Oh wait, that was the Jazz vs. the Spurs in 07. I didn't dislike them but got the impression in 07 that somebody likes the Spurs a little better the other teams. I may be proven wrong if we have another Celtics/Lakers final.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by jaga97 - 2008/04/30 15:25

The Spurs were called for 33 fouls and the Suns 27. The Suns shot 7 more free throws. Officials make bad calls both ways but most fans need Tivo and a little less homerism to know which ones are really bad calls.

The biggest foul of the suns series was trading away the best player on the team for a guy that people foul on purpose to gain an advantage. In this case the "hack a shaq" worked to perfection.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by Yndian - 2008/04/30 16:40

jaga97 wrote:

The Spurs were called for 33 fouls and the Suns 27. The Suns shot 7 more free throws. Officials make bad calls both ways but most fans need Tivo and a little less homerism to know which ones are really bad calls.

The biggest foul of the suns series was trading away the best player on the team for a guy that people foul on purpose to gain an advantage. In this case the "hack a shaq" worked to perfection.

Calling fouls is only one part of officiating (there's the inverse: not calling fouls that actually happen, there's out of bounds, jump balls, travels, etc.) Anyway, how many of those Spurs fouls were intentional? In any case, I said the refs were terrible. I didn't say they were only terrible against the Suns. And I thought I made it clear that they had very little to do with the outcome of the series.

I like how everyone says the Suns would have won with Shawn Marion (note: I am a HUGE Shawn Marion fan) while conveniently forgetting that they lost to the Spurs WITH Shawn Marion last year and in 2005. All the "Yeah, but"s in the world don't change that, just like they don't change what happened this year.

I think the Suns need to keep D'Antoni and the current team together one more year (i.e. for a whole season).

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by snoscythe - 2008/04/30 16:48

CLAP CLAP CLAP

The Mavs have now fired their head coach who amassed a win percentage of .735ish---the guy who openly opposed the geriatrics movement that brought Jason Kidd to town and ended the Mavericks tenure as a contender.

Here's to rebuilding!

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by craigscarson - 2008/04/30 18:03

snoscythe wrote:

CLAP CLAP CLAP

The Mavs have now fired their head coach who amassed a win percentage of .735ish---the guy who openly opposed the geriatrics movement that brought Jason Kidd to town and ended the Mavericks tenure as a contender.

Here's to rebuilding!

Agreed, Mark Cuban is willing to take risks, but he doesn't know basketball. He overpaid Marquis Daniels after overachieving for half a season (finally dumped that salary on the Pacers), He let Steve Nash go , Paid a boatload for Erik Dampier (their Greg Ostertag), aside from inheriting Dirk; and Howard and Terry working out better than expected, he's done more harm than good with that team.

The problem is that they're not getting younger and Kidd is losing his value; while the Trailblazers, Lakers, are young and getting better every day.

I think he's probably a really good boss though, when you're winning. Their window might have closed, Dirk may never get a ring in big D.

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by PO_POcoug - 2008/04/30 19:34

Hasn't Kidd been accused of running a previous or other previous coaches out of town? I am not saying he did now, but it looks mighty suspicious that Johnson has such a great record, doesn't want to trade for Kidd and now he is GONZO....

snoscythe wrote:

CLAP CLAP CLAP

The Mavs have now fired their head coach who amassed a win percentage of .735ish---the guy who openly opposed the geriatrics movement that brought Jason Kidd to town and ended the Mavericks tenure as a contender.

Here's to rebuilding!

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by craigscarson - 2008/04/30 19:59

PO_POcoug wrote:

Hasn't Kidd been accused of running a previous or other previous coaches out of town? I am not saying he did now, but it looks mighty suspicious that Johnson has such a great record, doesn't want to trade for Kidd and now he is GONZO....

snoscythe wrote:

CLAP CLAP CLAP

The Mavs have now fired their head coach who amassed a win percentage of .735ish---the guy who openly opposed the geriatrics movement that brought Jason Kidd to town and ended the Mavericks tenure as a contender.

Here's to rebuilding!

Kidd was a member of the "Three J's" in Dallas along with Jim Jackson and Jamal Mashburn.

Kidd had issues with Jimmy Jackson 10 years ago or so in Dallas. Coaching and GM problems followed.

There was a time when Kidd was easily the best guard in the NBA and incredibly underappreciated- it's just not now.

Imagine how Kobe must be feeling, the two trades he wanted (Kidd and then the Chicago Bulls fiasco) didn't go through (and may have sunk the Lakers too) and the one that fell in their laps to get Gasol has worked miraculously. I guess it's better to be lucky than good.

=====

Re:On the bright side...

Posted by snoscythe - 2008/04/30 20:49

craigoscarson wrote:

I guess it's better to be lucky than good.

(Robert Horry silently nods in agreement)

=====