Must See ESPN Video!! BCS Rant.

This may have been posted already so I apologize if it has, but on the front page of ESPN's college FB page and to the right is a rant by Howie Schwab (I have no idea who he is). He rants about the recent BCS decision. It is really funny. You could tell that he was doing everything in his power not to swear. It seems unscripted which makes it better. Not that it will change anything but it is nice to have someone on ESPN say what many fans are thinking.

I don't know Howie either, but his feelings are like mine. The system is broken. I would add, however, as one who is still competing in his old age, that the players deserve a playoff system, though it would be fun the for fans, too.

Championships should be won on the field, pitch, diamond, court, mat, stadium, arena, or whatever else is the place of competition. How real is it after the computers and the experts have selected the competitors?

Basketball's March madness provides an example. Every year, there are a few teams that "don't belong" who go much further than the experts said they should. David's dispatch Goliaths, much to the delight of their fans and lovers of underdogs everywhere.

Do we see any hope of something similar for football? No, we do not, and therein, because of the money, lies the real madness.

I completely agree. Only I wish he would have come out and called the Pac-10 commisioner a lying bastard. At least our commissioner is only inept.

BTW, did he seem like an angry drunk to anyone else?

Howie Schwab is the guy from the show "Stump the schwab" and the Couch Potato on espn 2's cold pizza. He rates every sporting event by bags of chips. But I think thats hilarious!
