
Kitic Update

Posted by kitic77 - 2008/05/01 15:09

Greetings Cougarblue!

I've about completed my training. We supposed to ship to Afghanistan in the not too distant future, so I thought I give you all an update. I've been training hard and feel ready to do my mission of tracking down Taliban communications. So here's to a safe return.

One of the company commanders knows the video director at BYU's athletic program and he has been assured that DVDs will be sent en masse of all the football and basketball games. He was also told that if any Soldiers wanted any other sport (soccer, gymnastics, even diving) those could be sent as well.

From what i've read and the few times i've been able to log on, it looks like i could be missing quite the season.

Well, hopefully, my connectivity is good down range and I can once again become a frequent participant on Cougarblue.

Thanks for all the well wishes. Go Cougs!

Good luck and be careful.

This might be my big chance to catch up with you in number of postings... :lol:

Hopefully you are able to stay connected. If so, please post some info about your situation, the people, & etc on the "other" thread.

Kitic, God speed to you and you have my respect for serving our country under such dangerous conditions.

Just a word, you know there are some close BYU fans among the talibun, have you tipped your hand to the odd lurker? ;)

If you're out in the field and hear one of those Taliban closet BYU fans playing "Rise and Shout", remember to keep your head down anyway.

Ever notice how in U.S. military terminology the good guys are the "blue forces" and the bad guys are the "red forces"? Gotta give 'em credit for being so inspired... :cheer:

It's threads like this that remind me that football is just a fun side show. The frailty of human life is self evident when someone you know gets exposed to potential harm. God speed kitic and keep us abreast of your well being.

Kitic: Are you pondering what I'm pondering?

ABYUFAN I think so Kitic, but me and Pipi Longstocking, I mean, what would the kids look like?

Zort!

You're a champ! Stay safe!
