I don't get it. Why can't Meyer offer him a scholarship?

He has every right in the world to offer a scolarship. I was just saying "Real Good... Our chances of getting him are even smaller now that Florida is in picture."

Is he a big fan of Florida? Unless he is I doubt they'll be in the picture.

If he is a good player i dont know why they wouldnt offer him. If we expect to get top notch players than we need to expect to fight it out to get them with top notch programs. Ive seen this type of post on a few players. I would be confused if really good players werent getting really good offers. And like Urban or not he is running a very very top notch program.

Spot on...

Adding Florida to his resume gives him more credibility. Esp. with Tebow coming off a heisman yr. Meyer can spot talent, anyone doubting is loco.

I don't think we've ever had a season at BYU where so many of our key recruits--the regulars that we have and always recruited, have been such high profile national recruits.

This really is a new era in this volume and it's only going to increase as time goes on.

It's an exciting time. I'm just not sure that we're going to do well against the BCS, especially as there are already more and more LDS athletes at some of these BCS schools.

The stone is rolling down the mountain, gathering momentum. We may not get them all now, but we will get more and more as time passes.

But we may also get less and less of them as there will continue to be more of them out there to be got.

It appears BYU made his first cut. Today he was suppose to narrow it down to 5 teams but he left it at 8.

BYU has also offered Taysom Hill from Idaho. Scout.com has Taysom rated at 4 stars (as is Nunes) and is ranked the 23rd best quarterback in the country (Nunes ranks 20). Taysom has 4.5 40 speed and is a dual threat. Nunes is slower and more of a pocket passer. I say let Nunes go, and aggressively go after Hill. Hill also has offers from Boise State, Stanford, Arizona, Washington State and Utah.
